ORDER XXXI.

SUITS BY OR AGAINST TRUSTEES, EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Representation of beneficiaries in suits concerning property vested in trustees, etc.

R. 1. [S. 437] In all suits concerning property vested in a trustee, executor or administrator, where the contention is between the persons beneficially interested in such property and a third person, the trustee, executor or administrator shall represent the persons so interested, and it shall not ordinarily be necessary to make them parties to the suit. But the Court may, if it thinks fit, order them or any of them to be made parties.

O. 31, R. 1, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope and object of the Rule.—This rule entitles a trustee to represent the beneficiaries in all suits concerning properties vested in the trustee, where the contention is between the beneficiaries and third persons.[1] But the Rule is an enabling one, and does not disentitle a person who happens to be a trustee from suing in his individual capacity at his option.[2] Nor can it be construed to mean that, for the purpose of suits under the Code of Civil Procedure, no person who is not a party can be represented by any person who is not a trustee, executor or administrator.[3]

In order that this rule may apply it is essential that

(1) the suit should be concerning property vested in the trustee, executor or administrator. A suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to worship in a temple and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with such right, is not a suit concerning property vested in a trustee, executor or administrator, and the rule will not apply to such a suit[4];

(2) the contention in the suit must be between the beneficiaries and a third person,[5] although the beneficiaries are unascertained or unascertainable persons[6] or body of persons.[7] The rule does not apply where the contention is between the beneficiaries themselves or between the beneficiary and the trustee, executor or administrator.[8]

Under section 43 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, a declaration granted in a suit in which any of the parties are trustees is binding on the beneficiaries.

2. When beneficiaries may be added as parties.—In suits by or against trustees, executors or administrators concerning property vested in them, it is not necessary that the beneficiaries should be impleaded as parties.[1] But the Court may, if it thinks fit, order them or any of them to be made parties. The beneficiaries may apply to be added as parties where there are reasonable grounds to suppose that their interest will not be sufficiently represented by the trustees or will be endangered unless they are made parties. Thus the beneficiaries can be added as parties where the trustee has no interest in the case or has an interest adverse to that of beneficiaries[2] or where the question in the suit is one of accounts and the trustee is the accounting party,[3] or where the beneficiaries are absolutely entitled to a major portion of the property and complain of breach of trust on the part of the trustee,[4] or where the interest of the beneficiaries are likely to be affected by their not being impleaded in the suit.[5] The trustee, executor, or administrator may also apply in a proper case for adding the beneficiaries as parties for the purpose of protecting himself[6]; but the beneficiaries may come in only where there is a trust admitted or proved to exist: where the factum of the trust itself is in dispute the beneficiaries are not necessary parties.[7]

Where a beneficiary is added in a suit by or against trustees under this rule it does not amount to the addition or substitution of new plaintiff or defendant within the meaning of section 22 of Limitation Act.[8]

Where a decree has been obtained by a trustee under this Rule the beneficial owner is entitled to sue for recovery of the benefit thereunder.[9]

Notes
1—4.

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The word "trustees" has been added before the word "executors".
2. The words "outside British India" have been substituted for the words "beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court".

2. Several trustees, executors or administrators.—This rule deals only with suits against and not with suits by trustees, executors or administrators. All executors who have proved the will or all administrators should be made parties.[1] Where one of them is an infant, a guardian ad-litem must be appointed for him, and properly served; otherwise the suit will be dismissed for defect of parties.[2] It has been held in the undermentioned case[3] that the rule applies only to suits, and not to applications, and that therefore it is competent for the Court to entertain an application for the appointment of a Receiver in a suit, even though all proving executors are not made parties thereto. The proviso to the rule clearly indicates that executors who have not proved their testators' will need not be made parties.[4] But when an executor intermeddles with the estate[5] or has acted as executor[6] he may be made a party even if he has not proved the will.

3. "Outside British India."—If a defendant insists that an executor is a necessary party, the onus is upon him to show that the latter is living within British India.[1] A Court will be justified in refusing to add, as defendant, an executor who had absconded[2] and whose whereabouts are not known.

4. Administration decree.—Where general administration is sought, a general personal representative is necessary.[1] Representation by an administrator ad-litem or by an executor or administrator de son tort is insufficient.[2]

R. 3. [S. 439.] Unless the Court directs otherwise, the husband of a married trustee, administratrix or executrix shall not as such be a party to a suit by or against her.

1. Suits by or against minors and persons of unsound mind.
2. Applicability of the order to execution proceedings.

1. Suits by or against minors and persons of unsound mind.—An infant is, in law, regarded as of immature intelligence and discretion[1] and, owing to his want of capacity and judgment, is disabled from binding himself, except where it is for his benefit.[2] Thus the law, will, as a general principle, treat all acts of an infant which are for his benefit on the same footing as those of an adult but will not permit him to do anything prejudicial to his own interests.[3] This principle regulates, not only the infant's capacity to acquire and dispose of property but also, his capacity in reference to legal proceedings instituted by or against him.[4] Thus a decree obtained in favour of a minor without his being represented by a next friend in the suit is not a nullity, whereas, no effectual or valid decree can be passed against a minor without his being represented by a proper guardian ad-litem.[5] A minor who is a party to a suit is considered to be under the protection of the Court and it is, consequently, the duty of the Court to watch his interests vigilantly and to see that he is represented by a fit and proper person.[6]

Persons who are of unsound mind or are suffering from mental infirmity and are thereby incapable of protecting their interests are placed on the same footing as minors for the purposes of legal proceedings by or against them.

This order has been made applicable to proceedings under the Ganjam and Vizagapatam Act (XXIV of 1839) (see R. 20) and to proceedings under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act [see Act VI of 1908, S. 265 (3)].

2. Applicability of the order to execution proceedings.—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this order directly applies to execution proceedings. According to one view, this order applies only to suits and not directly to execution proceedings and therefore, the fact that no guardian ad litem is appointed for a minor party in such proceedings will not vitiate the proceedings, if, in substance, his interests were represented by the other parties on the record[1] and if no injury has resulted to him by such non-representation.[2] Another view is that proceedings in execution are a continuation of the suit, that this Order applies to such proceedings[3] and that a compromise entered into by the guardian in execution proceedings is not binding on the minor if no sanction as required by Rule 7 is obtained therefor.[4] It is submitted that this last view is correct. As pointed out by Wallis, C.J. in Muthiah Chettiar v. Krishna Doss Varu[5] the Code expressly provides by O. 22, R. 12 that nothing in Rr. 3, 4 and 8 of that order shall apply to execution proceedings, and in O. 23, R. 4 that nothing in that order shall apply to execution proceedings, while it contains no such provision in O. 32. It would appear to follow from this that the Code has been drafted on the basis that an application for execution is a proceeding in a suit.

1. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule provides that every suit by a minor plaintiff shall be brought in his name by a next friend.[1] The reason why no proceedings can be taken by an infant without the assistance of a next friend is "on account of the infant's supposed want of discretion and his inability to bind himself and make himself liable for costs".[1-a] But the minor is the real plaintiff; the next friend is not a party to the suit in the proper sense of the term.[2] He only represents the minor's interest and acts for him. In the course of such representation he can choose his own solicitor or even change him although he is under an obligation not to make an appointment which would be detrimental to the interests of the minor.[3]

Though the word "shall" is used in the rule, a suit by a minor without a next friend should not normally be treated as abortive but an opportunity should be given to constitute the suit in the regular manner.[4] In Doorga Mohun Doss v. Tahir Ali (I.L.R. 22 Cal. 270) Sale, J. observed: "It would seem that the rule was intended for the protection and benefit of defendants, for it has been held that when a defendant waives this benefit and protection the suit may proceed without a next friend." (See Note 3 to Rule 2 following.)

O. 32, R.1, Notes 1—5.

The Code does not provide for suits by or on behalf of idols. On the analogy of this rule, however, it has been held that the Manager or the Shebait of an idol can sue on behalf of the idol, which is considered to be a perpetual minor in the eye of the law.[5]

2. Minor, who is.—Under section 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) every person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained majority when he shall have completed his age of 18 years and not before. But if before the expiry of the age of 18, a guardian for the person or for the property or for both of the minor has been appointed or declared by a Court of Justice, (apart from the provisions of Order 32 of the Code) or the minor's property is taken charge of by a Court of Wards, then the period of minority is extended till the completion of the age of 21.[1]

3. When a minor may sue without a next friend.—Under Section 32 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), a minor may institute a suit for any sum of money not exceeding 500 rupees which may be due to him under S. 70 of the Contract Act, 1872, for wages of piece-work or for work as a servant, in the same manner as if he were of full age.

4. Minor suing as adult.—See Note 2 to the next rule.

5. Suit on behalf of an alleged minor who is not a minor in fact.—Supposing a suit is filed through a next friend on the allegation that the plaintiff is a minor and it is subsequently found that the plaintiff was in fact a major even on the date of the suit. What is the proper procedure to be followed in such a case? The High Court of Allahabad in the undermentioned cases[1] held that the suit should be dismissed, the reason given being that there is no valid plaint before the Court. This view has, however, been overruled by a Special Bench decision of the same High Court which holds that where the mistake in filing suit is due to a bona fide doubt as regards the age of the minor, the defect is a formal one not affecting the merits of the case and can be cured by amendment.[2] The High Courts of Calcutta,[3] Lahore,[4] Madras,[5] the Chief Court of Oudh[6] and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur[6-a] have all held that the defect in such a case can be remedied by amending the plaint and by removing the next friend.

6. Where question of minority is in dispute.—Disputes as to the question of minority may arise—

(a) where the defendant who is sued as a major pleads that he is a minor. In such cases a preliminary issue should be framed for the purpose of deciding the plea of minority and for the trial on this issue a guardian ad litem should be appointed for the alleged minor.[1] See also Note 4 to R. 3, infra.

(b) Where the plaintiff sues as a major without a next friend and the defendant pleads that he is a minor, in such a case the procedure prescribed by rule 2 should be followed.

The burden of proving minority is on the party who alleges it.[2] As to the quantum of evidence sufficient to prove minority, see the following cases.[3]

7. Objection in appeal to authority of next friend.—If the minor plaintiff has the right to sue, objection as to the want of or any defect in, the authority of the next friend is not fatal to the suit and cannot be raised for the first time in appeal.[1] Such a defect does not affect the merits of the case and comes within the purview of Section 99 of the Code.[2]

8. Title of suit.—In a suit by the minor plaintiff, the title and description of the minor should be "X, a minor by his next friend Y, versus A B, defendant".[1] Similarly, when the minor is the defendant he should be described as "X, a minor by guardian ad litem Y". But a defect or misdescription in title, as for instance, where the mother of the minor plaintiff describes herself as J, for herself and as guardian of her minor daughter S, is not fatal to the suit.[2] The defect is a formal one and cannot afford a ground per se for interference in appeal.[3]

9. Liability of next friend for costs.—The words "and may be ordered to pay any costs in the suit as if he were the plaintiff" occurring in the corresponding section 440 of the old Code have been omitted. But the omission does not affect the discretion of the Court in proper cases to order the next friend to be personally liable for costs, as for example, when it finds that the suit was instituted by him without any bona fides[1] or where the suit is dismissed, and the Court is not satisfied that the suit was instituted for the benefit of the minor.[2] Where, however, the Court finds that there were reasonble grounds for filing the suit and the next friend has been bona fide in his conduct, it will direct the costs to come out of the minor's estate.[3]

Save in exceptional cases neither the infant plaintiff nor the next friend ought to be required to give security for costs.[4] Where on the death of a deceased creditor, his minor legal representative demands the debt, the debtor is entitled to refuse to pay until his interests are safeguarded by the production of a succession certificate or of a probate or Letters of Administration; where the minor in such a case sues the debtor for the amount, the defendant is not liable for the costs of the suit.[5]

10. Effect of decree in suits by minors.—If a minor is properly represented by the next friend and there is no fraud or collusion, or gross negligence on his part, the decree passed in the suit is binding on the minor as on an adult and will operate as res judicata.[1] See also Note 13 to R. 3, infra and Note 69 to S. 11, ante.

11—13.

11. Estoppel.—A Court of Equity will deprive a fraudulent minor of the benefit of the plea of infancy when, by his conduct or representation he induces others to believe that he is a major. Thus where a minor, representing himself to be of full age, collects rents, and grants receipts[1] or where he executes a registered sale-deed representing himself to be a major[2] he will be estopped from filing a suit through a next friend questioning the validity of those transactions. But the person relying upon the plea of estoppel must himself come with clean hands and prove not only that fraud was practised upon him by the minor but that he was deceived into action by such fraud.[3] In other words there can be no estoppel when the truth (of minority) is known to both the parties.[4]

12. Limitation.—As already pointed out in Note 1, the suit though filed by the next friend is really that of the minor plaintiff and is governed by the law of limitation applicable to the minor.[1] He is entitled to the exemption prescribed by sections 6 and 7 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).[2]

13. Attorney's costs.—The costs incurred by the attorney or solicitor of the guardian or next friend of a minor party in properly prosecuting or defending the suit are recoverable from the estate of the minor as "necessaries" under section 68 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872).[1] The High Court of Madras has, however, held that, where a suit instituted on behalf of a minor, is repudiated by him on his attaining majority pending the suit, and the suit is dismissed, the solicitor cannot recover his costs from the estate of the quandum minor but can proceed against the next friend personally.[2] But in any case the attorney is entitled only to a charge on the minor's estate and cannot get a personal decree against the infant.[3]

O. 32, R. 2, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope of the Rule.—Where a minor sues without a next friend, the defendant can, under this Rule, apply to have the plaint taken off the file. But even without any such application the Court is bound to take notice of the minority of the plaintiff, if the same is disclosed in the course of the trial, and suspend all proceedings in the suit until the defect is remedied by the minor getting himself properly represented by a next friend.[1]

Where there is a certificated guardian appointed for a minor under the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), but a suit is filed by a third person on behalf of the minor, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the suit should be considered to be filed by the minor without a next friend and should be taken off the file.[2]

2. Suit by minor without a next friend.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that this Rule applies only to cases where the fact of minority is apparent on the face of the plaint and that the rule does not contemplate an inquiry into the question of minority where the plaint prima facie shows that the plaintiff is a major.[1] In the latter case where on enquiry the plaintiff is actually found to be a minor the proper procedure according to that Court is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented in the suit by a next friend. If the Court purports to act under this rule, and takes the plaint off the file, the order must be treated as a decree dismissing the suit or an order rejecting the plaint in both of which cases an appeal will lie.[2] On the other hand, the High Court of Bombay has held that this rule applies even to cases where the fact of minority is disclosed, on enquiry, but that the Court should as a matter of practice stay proceedings and allow sufficient time to enable the minor plaintiff to be represented by a next friend unless the plaintiff instituted the suit with the knowledge of the fact of minority and with the intention of deceiving the Court and of evading the payment of costs in the event of failure, in which case the suit should be taken off the file.[3] The High Courts of Lahore,[4] and Madras,[5] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh,[6] have taken the same view.

In any view, where the plaintiff attains majority by the time of the enquiry as to his minority, there is no necessity for an amendment inasmuch as he can elect to proceed with the suit.[7]

3. Waiver of objection by defendant.—Where a defendant against whom a suit is instituted by a minor is aware of the minority of the plaintiff and yet elects to proceed to trial and take the chance of obtaining a decree in his favour on the merits without raising any objection under this rule, he cannot be allowed for the first time in appeal, when the trial has gone against him, to contend that the suit is not maintainable owing to the minority of the plaintiff. The decree passed in such a case is not a nullity. The non-representation of the minor by a next friend is only an irregularity capable of being waived by the defendant.[1]

On the same principle it has been held that where on objection taken by the defendant, a next friend is appointed for the plaintiff, the defendant cannot object in appeal that the suit was originally filed without a next friend and was, therefore, not maintainable.[2]

4. Costs.—Where the plaintiff is found to be a minor and the plaint is consequently directed to be taken off the file of the Court, costs should not be ordered to be recovered from the estate of the minor; the pleader or other person presenting the plaint should be made liable therefor.[1]

ALLAHABAD.

Add the following proviso to R. 3 (4):—

BOMBAY.

LAHORE.

The following sub-rules were substituted for sub-Rr. (3) and (4):—

"(3) The plaintiff shall file with his plaint a list of relatives of the minor and other persons, with their addresses, who prima facie are most likely to be capable of acting as guardian for the suit for a minor defendant. The list shall constitute an application by the plaintiff under sub-R. (2), above.

(4) The Court may at any time after institution of the suit call upon the plaintiff to furnish such a list, and, in default of compliance, may reject the plaint.

(5) Any application for the appointment of a guardian for the suit and any list furnished under this rule shall be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in controversy in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that each person proposed is a fit person to be so appointed.

(6) No order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf, or, where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor or, where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub-rule:

MADRAS.

Delete Rr. 3 and 4 and substitute in lieu thereof the new R. 3 set forth below:—

Qualifications to be a next friend or guardian.

3. (1) Any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit:

Provided that the interest of that person is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not, in the case of a next friend, a defendant, or, in the case of a guardian for the suit, a plaintiff.

Appointed or declared guardians to be preferred and to be superseded only for reasons recorded.

(2) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than the guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed as the case may be.

Guardians to be appointed by Court.

(3) Where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for the minor.

O. 32, R. 3.

Appointment to be on application and where necessary after notice to proposed guardian.

(4) An order for the appointment of a guardian for the suit may be obtained upon application in the name and on behalf of the minor or by the plaintiff. The application, where it is by the plaintiff, shall set forth, in the order of their suitability, a list of persons (with their full addresses for service of Notice in Form No. 11-A set forth in Appendix H hereto) who are competent and qualified to act as guardian for the suit for the minor defendant. The Court may for reasons to be recorded, in any particular case, exempt the applicant from furnishing the list referred to above.

Contents of affidavit in support of the application for appointment of guardian.

(5) The application referred to in the above sub-rule whether made by the plaintiff or on behalf of the minor defendant shall be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has not, or that no one of the proposed guardians has, any interest in the matters in controversy in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that the proposed guardian or guardians are fit persons to be so appointed. The affidavit shall further state according to the circumstances of each case (a) particulars of any existing guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, (b) the name and address of the person, if any, who is the de facto guardian of the minor, (c) the names and addresses of persons, if any, who in the event of either the natural or the de facto guardian or the guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, not being permitted to act, are by reason of relationship or interest or otherwise, suitable persons to act as guardian for the minor for the suit.

Application for appointment of guardian to be separate from application for bringing on record the legal representatives of a deceased party.

(6) An application for the appointment of a guardian for the suit of a minor shall not be combined with an application for bringing on record the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff or defendant. The applications shall be by separate petitions.

Notice of application to be given to persons interested in the minor defendant other than the proposed guardian.

(7) No order shall be made on any application under sub-R. (4) above except upon notice to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf or where there is no guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub-rule. The notice required by this sub-rule shall be served six clear days before the day named in the notice for the hearing of the application and may be in Form No. 11 set forth in Appendix H hereto.

Special provision to shorten delay in getting a guardian appointed.

(8) Where the application is by the plaintiff, he shall, along with his application and affidavit referred to in sub-Rr. (4) and (5) above, produce the necessary forms in duplicate, filled in to the extent that is possible at that stage, for the issue simultaneously of notices to two at least of the proposed guardians for the suit to be selected by the Court from the list referred to in sub-R. (4) above, together with a duly stamped voucher indicating that the fees prescribed for service have been paid. If one or more of the proposed guardians signify his or their consent to act, the Court shall appoint one of them and intimate the fact of such appointment to the person appointed by registered post. If no one of the person served signifies his consent to act, the Court shall proceed to serve simultaneously another selected two, if so many there be, of the persons named in the list referred to in sub-R. (4) above, but no fresh application under sub-R. (4) shall be deemed necessary. The applicant shall, within three days of intimation of unwillingness by the first set of proposed guardians, pay the prescribed fee for service and produce the necessary forms duly filled in.

No person shall be appointed guardian without his consent.

(9) No person shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit. Whenever an application is made proposing the name of a person as guardian for the suit, a notice in Form No. 11-A set forth in Appendix H hereto shall be served on the proposed guardian, unless the applicant himself be the proposed guardian or the proposed guardian consents.

Court guardian—when to be appointed—how he is to be placed in funds.

(10) Where the Court finds no person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit the Court may appoint any of its officers or a pleader of the Court to be the guardian and may direct that the costs to be incurred by that officer in the performance of his duties as guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the re-payment or allowance of the costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.

Funds for a guardian other than Court guardian to defend.

(11) When a guardian for the suit of a minor defendant is appointed and it is made to appear to the Court that the guardian is not in possession of any or sufficient funds for the conduct of the suit on behalf of the defendant and that the defendant will be prejudiced in his defence thereby, the Court may, from time to time, order the plaintiff to advance moneys to the guardian for purpose of his defence and all moneys so advanced shall form part of the costs of the plaintiff in the suit. The order shall direct that the guardian, as and when directed, shall file in Court an account of the moneys so received by him.

NAGPUR.

For Rr. 3 and 4, substitute the following:—

Guardian for the suit to be appointed by Court for minor defendant.

"3. Where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit of such minor.

Who may act as next friend or guardian for the suit.

4. (1) Any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit.

Provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not, in the case of a next friend, a defendant, or, in the case of a guardian for the suit, a plaintiff:

(2) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or as his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act in either capacity.

Procedure for appointment of guardian for the suit.

4-A. (1) No person, except the guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit.

(2) An order for the appointment of a guardian for the suit may be obtained upon application in the name and on behalf of the minor or by the plaintiff.

(3) Unless the Court is otherwise satisfied of the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest adverse to that of the minor in the matters in controversy in the suit and that he is a fit person to be so appointed, it shall require such application to be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact.

O. 32, R. 3.

(4) No order shall be made on any application for the appointment as guardian for the suit of any person, other than a guardian of the minor appointed or declared by competent authority, except upon notice to the proposed guardian for the suit and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by competent authority, or, where there is no such guardian, the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection that may be urged on a day to be specified in the notice. The Court may, in any case, if it thinks fit, issue notice to the minor also.

(5) Where, on or before the specified day, such proposed guardian fails to appear and express his consent to act as guardian for the suit, or, where he is considered unfit, or disqualified under sub-R. (3), the Court may, in the absence of any other person fit and willing to act, appoint any of its officers or a pleader to be guardian for the suit.

(6) In any case in which there is a minor defendant the Court may direct that a sufficient sum shall be deposited in Court by the plaintiff from which sum the expenses of the minor defendant in the suit shall be paid. The matter shall be adjusted in accordance with the final order passed in the suit in respect of costs.''

OUDH.

Add the following proviso to R. 3 (4):—

RANGOON.

The following shall be substituted, namely:—

''3. (1) Where any of the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper guardian for the suit for such minor.

(2) For this purpose there shall be filed by the plaintiff with the plaint a list of all persons whom the plaintiff considers to be capable of acting as guardian of the minor for the suit. Such list shall be in the form of an application duly verified and requesting that one of such persons may be appointed guardian of the minor for the suit, and shall state for each of such persons whether he has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, or a natural guardian, or the custodian of the minor, or a stranger, and shall give the address of each of such persons.

(3) An order for the appointment of a guardian for the suit may also be obtained upon application in the name and on behalf of the minor.

(4) An application under sub-R. (2) or sub-R. (3) shall be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in controversy in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that he is a fit person to be so appointed.

(5) No order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf, or, where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or, where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub-rule.''

1. Scope and object of the rule.—The object of the rule is to see that the minor's interest does not suffer and that he is properly represented in a suit filed against him.[1] The Court cannot, therefore, be too jealous in observing the requirements of the law in regard to infants and in seeing that their interests are properly safeguarded. It should be satisfied not merely that the proposed guardian is a fit and proper person to act as guardian but also that he has no interest, directly or indirectly, adverse to the minor.[2] As to the applicability of the rule to proceedings other than suits, see the undermentioned cases.[3]

2. "Shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit."—The provisions of the rule are mandatory and the Court is bound to appoint a proper guardian for a minor defendant.[1] The appointment is not a mere matter of form. The Court is bound to satisfy itself that the proposed guardian is a fit and proper person to represent the interests of the minor.[2] A decree obtained against a minor without appointing a guardian for him as required by this rule is nullity (see Note 5, infra). The principle that the manager of a joint Hindu family represents in litigation the other members including minor co-parceners does not apply when minors are made parties to a suit, the Court is therefore bound to appoint a guardian for the minor defendant even though the managing member of the family of which such minor is a member is a co-defendant.[3]

But the fact that the validity of the proceedings depends upon the appointment of a proper guardian for a minor defendant does not mean that for purposes of limitation a suit is not validly filed until a guardian

O. 32, R.3, Notes 2—5.

ad litem is appointed for the minor; the institution of a suit is complete and saves limitation even though the further progress of the suit depends upon the appointment of a suitable guardian.[4]

2-A. Title of suit against minor.—In a suit against a minor, the minor should himself be made, and described as, a defendant, some other person being named as guardian. Thus a suit against C.D., a minor, should describe him as "C.D., a minor, of whom E.F. is guardian ad litem".[1]

3. "On being satisfied of the fact of his minority."—See the undermentioned case.[1]

4. When defendant pleads minority.—When a defendant who is sued as a major pleads that he is a minor, the proper procedure is to raise a preliminary issue on the question of his minority, and give a finding thereon. In the proceedings for the determination of such issue, however, the alleged minor should be represented by a guardian ad litem appointed by the Court. If it is found that the defendant is in fact a minor, then a guardian should be appointed for the suit. If not, the guardian appointed for the enquiry should cease to act.[1] On the analogy of this principle, it has been held that where a minor applies to be brought on record as the legal representative of a deceased party, the Court ought to appoint a guardian for the purpose of the enquiry as to his being the legal representative.[2]

5. Non-representation.—A minor cannot be considered to be a party to a suit unless he is represented therein by a duly qualified guardian. A decree passed against a minor not so represented must be regarded as a decree passed against a person not a party to the suit and is therefore without jurisdiction, null and void.[1] In order to set aside such a decree it is not necessary to show that the minor has suffered any prejudice by non-representation.[2] Not being a party to the suit, the minor will not be barred by the principle of res judicata from raising the same questions in a subsequent suit as were decided in the prior suit.[3] On the same principle their Lordships of the Privy Council have held in Rashid-un-nissa v. Muhammad Ismail, I.L.R. 31 All. 572, that a minor not represented in the suit cannot, in execution, object to the execution of the decree.[3-a] Their Lordships observed as follows: "Section 244 (now S. 47) of the Civil Procedure Code applies to questions arising between parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, that is to say, between parties who were properly made parties in accordance with the provisions of the Code." It will also follow from this that a minor not properly represented in the suit and against whom an ex parte decree has been passed cannot apply under O. 9, R. 13 to set aside the ex parte decree, inasmuch as under that rule only a defendant, that is, a person properly made a defendant, can apply. This is the view of the High Court of Madras,[4] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur.[5] The High Court of Allahabad[6] and the Chief Court of Oudh[7] have, however, held that such an application is maintainable. In view of the Privy Council decision mentioned above, it is submitted that the latter view is not correct.

O. 32, R.3, Note 5.

Where an incompetent or disqualified guardian is appointed for a minor party, the position is the same as if no guardian is appointed at all.[8] As to when a guardian ad litem can be regarded as a disqualified person and when not, see Notes 4 to 8 to R. 4, infra.

Where a minor is represented in the suit by a duly qualified guardian, he becomes legally a party to the suit and the Court acquires jurisdiction to decide his case.[9] The decree passed against him in such a case is binding on him as much as on an adult, and the judgment will operate as res judicata against him in subsequent proceedings.[10] The law, however, recognises a substantive right in him to avoid the decree so passed if he can establish that the guardian has been grossly negligent in the conduct of the suit and if he suffered prejudice by reason of such negligence.[11] The minor can exercise this right in various ways:—

(1) If the decree is an ex parte one, he may apply under O. 9, R. 13 to set aside the ex parte decree. The negligence of the guardian may constitute a "sufficient cause" for setting aside the decree within the meaning of that rule.[12]

(2) He may prefer an appeal from the decree.

(3) He may apply for a review of the judgment.[12-a]

(4) He may file a suit to set aside the decree.[13]

(5) He may even, in defence, show that the decree is not binding on him on the ground of gross negligence of the guardian and consequent prejudice.[14]

Where a decree is set aside on the ground of non-representation or on the ground of gross negligence of the guardian in the conduct of the suit, the minor is remitted to his original rights as it stood before the decree, and the Court can, under its inherent powers, revive the first suit and proceed with it from the stage at which it was declared that the proceedings were illegal as against the minor.[15]

6. Absence of formal order of appointment of guardian—Substantial representation.—Where a minor defendant is effectively represented by a guardian with the sanction of the Court, the mere fact that a formal order of appointment was not passed will not render the decree a nullity as in the case of non-representation. The absence of the order of appointment is only an irregularity which in the absence of any prejudice to the minor resulting therefrom, will not be a ground for setting aside the decree.[1] On the same principle it has been held that the want of a certificate required by S. 3 of the Bengal Minors' Act, 1858 (now repealed by Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890)[2] or a misdescription of the minor in the pleadings[3] are only irregularities which are not necessarily fatal to the suit.

7. Illegal procedure in appointing guardian.—A defect or irregularity in procedure in the appointment of a guardian ad litem is also only an irregularity and will not be a ground for setting aside the decree unless it had the effect of causing prejudice to the minor.[1] In Walian v. Banke Behari, I.L.R. 30 Cal. 1021, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee after impressing upon the Courts in India the importance of following strictly the rules laid down by the Code, proceeded to observe at page 1031: "But it is quite another thing to say that a defect in following the rules is necessarily fatal to the proceedings." Applying this principle, it has been held that a failure to issue notice as required by sub-R. (4),[2] or the absence of, or omission to, file an affidavit as required by sub-R. (3),[3] are mere irregularities which, by themselves, cannot render the decree void and cannot be a ground for setting aside the decree unless prejudice is proved to have resulted to the minor. The question whether the minor was prejudiced in any particular case depends upon the facts and circumstances of that case and does not necessarily follow from the irregularity in the appointment of a guardian ad litem.[4]

8. Decree against major treating him as minor and vice versa.—A major defendant who is described and impleaded as a minor[1] or a minor who is treated as a major and impleaded as such[2] cannot be treated as a party to the suit and is not bound by the decree passed in the suit. But if the major defendant is aware of the defect or takes part in the proceedings without objection he will be estopped from questioning the validity of the decree later on.[3]

9. Such application shall be supported by affidavit—Sub-clause (3).—An application for the appointment of a guardian should be supported by an affidavit stating the fact of minority of the defendant and that the proposed guardian is a fit person to be appointed as guardian. The Court must be satisfied that the person it appoints will safeguard the interests of the minor and that he has no interest of his own which will come into conflict with that of the minor.[1] But as already pointed out in Note 7 the absence of such an affidavit is only an irregularity and cannot render the decree invalid.[2]

See sub-R. (3) of R. 3 substituted by the Madras High Court as to the contents of the affidavit in support of a petition under this rule.

10. Service of summons.—There is no specific mode provided for the service of summons on a minor defendant. It should therefore be served in the manner prescribed for service of summons under O. 5 ante.[1] Where, however, a guardian has been appointed in the suit for the minor, notice of an appeal from a decree in that suit need only be served on the guardian.[2]

11. Notice to the minor and his guardian.—No order should be made under this rule appointing a guardian for a minor defendant unless and until the necessary notices are given to the persons referred to in the rule.[1] The object of giving a notice to the minor is twofold: he may not be a minor at all, in which case he may come to Court and defend the suit as a major[2]: even if he is a minor he has a right to be heard and his wish consulted in the matter of the choice of his guardian.[3]

But the omission to send the notice required by this rule is, as has been observed in Note 7 supra, only an irregularity which will not vitiate the proceedings unless it is proved that the minor has been prejudiced thereby in his defence[4] or there is fraud or collusion on the part of the guardian.[5] Such prejudice is not a matter of assumption or presumption, but of positive proof.[6]

12. Duties of a guardian—Gross negligence.—The guardian ad litem is in the position of a trustee and is bound to act strictly in the interests of the minor and to raise the best possible defences for him.[1] He must act in good faith, i.e., with due care and caution.[2] It has been seen in Note 5 supra that the law recognises a substantive right in the minor to avoid the decree passed against him where the guardian has been negligent in the conduct of the suit. It is not however every kind of negligence which will render the proceedings otherwise regular and proper, liable to be re-opened. The negligence must be such as leads to the loss of a right which might have been successfully asserted if the suit had been defended with due care.[3] In other words, the negligence must be such as would imply that the person guilty of it neglected to do what was plainly his duty to do, or did something which he ought not to have done, or omitted to do something which any man of ordinary prudence would have done.[4] When a guardian exhibits want of such knowledge or information as is easily available it may amount to gross negligence.[4-a] But a mere omission on the part of the guardian to appear at the trial would not amount to gross negligence if there was no good ground of defence available to be put forward on behalf of the minor.[5] Nor is it the duty of the guardian to raise frivolous and untenable defences.[6] And it will be no dereliction of duty on his part to refuse to litigate on behalf of his ward, a claim which he knows to be false and unfounded in fact.[7] The test is whether there has been culpable neglect of the interests of the minor, and whether there has been in the conduct of the suit any act or omission on the part of the guardian which has resulted in prejudice to the minor.[8]

13. Effect of fraud or gross negligence of guardian.—It has been observed in Note 5 ante that when a minor is represented in a suit by a duly qualified guardian he becomes legally a party to the suit and that the decree passed against him is binding on him as much as on an adult and that the judgment will operate against him as res judicata in subsequent proceedings. But where the guardian has been guilty of fraud or collusion the minor like any other party to a suit can, under the provisions of S. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act, avoid the bar of res judicata against him by proving such fraud or collusion. It has been held by the High Court of Madras that, on the analogy of the same section, the minor can avoid the bar of res judicata by showing that the guardian was guilty of gross negligence in the conduct of the suit.[1] In the undermentioned case[2] the High Court of Allahabad has also held that the judgment obtained against a minor in a suit in which the guardian has been guilty of gross negligence is not res judicata against him. It has, however, reached this conclusion on the view that the principle of S. 44 of the Evidence Act cannot be applied to such a case but that the minor ceases "for all practical purposes" to be a party to the suit when the guardian is guilty of gross negligence, and that therefore the previous decision was not one between the parties to the subsequent suit and that therefore there could be no res judicata. It is submitted that the reasoning is not correct. Where once a guardian ad litem is duly appointed for a minor party he becomes, as has been seen already, legally a party to the suit and the Court acquires jurisdiction to hear his case. He cannot cease to be a party or continue to be a party from time to time according as the guardian is acting negligently or otherwise.

14. Probate proceedings.—Although as a rule of practice it may be expedient to have a guardian appointed where a will, of which probate is sought, affects the interests of a minor,[1] yet S. 141 of the Code and consequently O. 32 will not apply to proceedings in probate which have not reached a contentious stage.[2]

Local Amendments.

ALLAHABAD.

Substitute the following for R. 4:—

"4. (1) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as next friend, except by leave of the Court.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-R. (1) any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor, unless the interest of such person is adverse to that of the minor, or he is a defendant, or the Court for other reasons to be recorded considers him unfit to act.

(3) Every next friend shall, except as otherwise provided by Cl. (5) of this rule, be entitled to be reimbursed from the estate of the minor any expenses incurred by him while acting for the minor.

(4) The Court may in its discretion, for reasons to be recorded, award costs of the suit, or compensation under S. 35-A or S. 95 against the next friend personally as if he were a plaintiff.

(5) Costs or compensation awarded under Cl. (4) shall not be recoverable by the guardian from the estate of the minor, unless the decree expressly directs that they shall be so recoverable."

Add the following R. 4-A:—

4-A. (1) Where a minor has a guardian appointed by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be appointed.

(2) Where there is no such guardian, or where the Court considers that such guardian should not be appointed, it shall appoint as guardian for the suit the natural guardian of the minor, if qualified, or, where there is no such guardian, the person in whose care the minor is, or any other suitable person who has notified the Court of his willingness to act, or failing any such person, an officer of the Court.

Explanation.—An officer of the Court shall for the purposes of this sub-rule include a legal practitioner on the roll of the Court.

(3) No person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit; provided that in all cases the consent of such person shall be presumed, unless within fifteen days of receipt of notice from the Court, he notifies to the Court his refusal to accept appointment as such guardian. Refusal to accept notice shall be presumed to be refusal to act.

(4) Where an officer of the Court is appointed guardian for the suit under sub-R. (2), the Court may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.

OUDH.

Substitute the following for R. 4:—

''4. (1) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority no person other than such guardian shall act as next friend, except by leave of the Court.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-R. (1) any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor, unless the interest of such person is adverse to that of the minor, or he is a defendant, or the Court for other reasons to be recorded considers him unfit to act.

(3) Every next friend shall, except as otherwise provided by sub-R. (5) of this rule, be entitled to be re-imbursed from the estate of the minor any expenses incurred by him while acting for the minor.

(4) The Court may, in its discretion, for reasons to be recorded, award costs of the suit, or compensation under S. 35-A or S. 95 against the next friend personally as if he were a plaintiff.

(5) Costs or compensation awarded under sub-R. (4) shall not be recoverable by the guardian from the estate of the minor, unless the decree expressly directs that they shall be so recoverable.''

Add the following R. 4-A:—

4-A. (1) Where a minor has a guardian appointed by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be appointed.

(2) Where there is no such guardian, or where the Court considers that such guardian should not be appointed, it shall appoint as guardian for the suit, the natural guardian of the minor, if qualified, or, where there is no such guardian, the person in whose care the minor is, or any other suitable person who has notified the Court of his willingness to act, or failing any such person, an officer of the Court.

Explanation.—An officer of the Court shall for the purposes of this sub-rule include a legal practitioner on the roll of the Court.

(3) No person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit: provided that in all cases the consent of such person shall be presumed, unless within fifteen days of receipt of notice from the Court, he notifies to the Court his refusal to accept appointment as such guardian. Refusal to accept notice shall be presumed to be refusal to act.

(4) Where an officer of the Court is appointed guardian for the suit under sub-R. (2), the Court may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.

PATNA.

In sub-R. (4) for the words ''where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit'', in the first sentence of the sub-rule, substitute the following:—

O. 32, R.4, Notes 1—2.

"Where the person whom the Court, after hearing objections, if any, under sub-R. (4) of R. 3, proposes to appoint as guardian for the suit, fails, within the time fixed in a notice to him to express his consent to be so appointed."

RANGOON.

For R. 4, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

(2) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor, or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed, as the case may be.

(3) In the event of there being no such guardian, the natural guardian of the minor, or, if there is no natural guardian, the person in whose care the minor is, should, subject to the proviso to sub-R. (1), ordinarily be appointed his guardian for the suit.

(4) No person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit.

(5) Where none of the aforementioned persons, or of the persons mentioned by the plaintiff in the list filed by him under sub-R. (2) of R. 3, is fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit, and where no application is made on behalf of the minor under sub-R. (3) of R. 3, the Court may appoint any of its officers to be such guardian, and may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require. An advocate or pleader of the Court shall be an officer of the Court for this purpose."

1. Legislative changes.—

Sub-R. (1) corresponds to Ss. 445 and 457 of the old Code, and sub-R. (2) to Ss. 440 and 443, second paragraph. Sub-R. (3) is new. Sub-R. (4) corresponds to the second paragraph of S. 456 of the old Code. The provision as to the direction with regard to the costs to be incurred by the Court guardian is new.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule deals with the question as to who can act as next friend or be appointed as guardian of a minor for the suit. The general rule is that any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may so act or be so appointed, provided his interests are not adverse to that of the minor (sub-R. 1).[1] Where there is a certificated guardian for the minor it is he that should be allowed to act as next friend or be appointed as guardian and not any other person unless it is for the welfare of the minor that another person should be appointed (sub-R. 2). Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian, the Court may appoint its own officer to act as guardian (sub-R. 3).

The powers of the Court under this rule and R. 11 of this Order are exercisable by the Registrar under S. 105 of Sch. I of the Rangoon Small Cause Court Act (VII of 1920).

3. Who may be next friend or guardian of a minor.—Any person can be the next friend or the guardian of a minor provided—

(1) he is not of unsound mind,
(2) he is himself not a minor,
(3) his interests are not adverse to that of the minor, and,
(4) he is not the opposite party, i.e., a defendant in the case of a next friend or a plaintiff in the case of a guardian. (See also.[1])

Provided these conditions are satisfied the mere fact that he happens to be an undischarged insolvent will not invalidate his appointment as a guardian.[2]

4. Married woman.—Under S. 457 of the Code of 1882 a married woman was disqualified from being appointed as guardian ad litem in a suit. Consequently it was held that a decree obtained against a minor with a married woman as his guardian was a nullity.[1] But it was held that the prohibition did not apply to the case of a next friend and that a married woman could validly represent a minor plaintiff.[2] Under the present rule the disqualification has been removed altogether so that a married woman can now represent the minor plaintiff as well as a defendant.

5. Persons with adverse interest.— The proviso to sub-R. (1) prohibits the appointment of a guardian ad litem whose interests are adverse to that of the minor. Such a person is disqualified to be the guardian of the minor.[1] A minor represented by such a person is not legally represented at all and a decree obtained against him will be a nullity.[2] In the undermentioned cases,[3] however, it was held by the High Court of Madras that the mere fact that the interest of the guardian was adverse to that of the minor is not sufficient to invalidate the decree passed against the minor, but that the minor should be shown to have suffered prejudice by such appointment. The decisions do not advert to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rashid Unnissa v. Muhammad Ismail, I.L.R. 31 All. 572, in which it is laid down that a person having an interest adverse to that of the minor is a disqualified person and that the minor cannot be deemed to have been legally represented by him. The said decisions cannot, therefore, be considered to be correct.

The question whether the interests of the guardian are adverse to that of the minor depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.[3-a] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a person who has executed a document or entered into a transaction on behalf of the minor is a person whose interests are adverse to that of the minor in a suit on that document or transaction. According to the High Courts of Allahabad[4] and Patna[5] his interests are adverse and he cannot therefore be appointed as guardian of the minor. According to a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras,[6] his interests are not necessarily adverse to that of the minor in all cases but whether they are so in any particular case depends upon the facts of that case.

6. Guardian appointed by competent authority.—Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by a competent authority, the Court is bound to appoint that guardian as guardian ad litem of the minor unless for reasons to be recorded it considers that in the interest and welfare of the minor some one else should be appointed.[1] According to the High Courts of Allahabad,[2] Calcutta,[3] and Patna,[4] the violation of this provision is only an irregularity and does not, by itself, vitiate the decree. Thus where the mother of certain minor defendants was appointed their guardian ad litem in ignorance of the fact that there was a certificated guardian, it was held that the decree could not be set aside in the absence of any proof of prejudice to the minors.[5] The High Court of Madras[6] has, on the other hand, held that in such a case the appointment is illegal and the decree obtained against the minor, void.

The words "appointed by competent authority" do not include the case of a Hindu father purporting to appoint a testamentary guardian to his son even assuming that he has the power to appoint a guardian under the general Hindu Law.[7]

7. "Another person be permitted to act."—A Court can in the interests of the minor permit a person other than the certificated guardian to act or appoint him as a guardian ad litem of the minor notwithstanding the existence of a certificated guardian. Thus, where the appointment or the identity of the certificated guardian is not known[1] the Court may appoint another person as guardian ad litem of the minor.

8. Appointment of person as guardian without his consent.—Sub-R. (3) controls both sub-R. (1) and sub-R. (2)[1] and provides that no person, shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit. The consent may however be express or implied.[1-a] The object of the rule is to safeguard the interests of the minor by ensuring that the guardian has taken upon himself the onerous duty of defending the interests of the minor.[2] Where a person is appointed guardian of a minor without his consent, express or implied, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether the decree passed must be deemed to be one passed against the minor who has not been represented in the suit, and to be therefore a nullity. The High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta have held that the decree passed under such circumstances is a nullity.[3] The High Courts of Madras and Patna have expressed conflicting opinions on this point, holding in some cases that it is a nullity,[4] and in others that it is only an irregularity which, in the absence of proof of prejudice to the minor, will not vitiate the decree.[5] It is submitted that the last view is correct. As has been seen in Note 5 to R. 3, ante, where, on the face of the record, the minor is represented by a person and such person is not disqualified to be a guardian, the Court has jurisdiction to deal with the suit against the minor and the non-compliance with the various requirements in the process of appointing the guardian cannot render the judgment a nullity, but would only amount to irregularities which may be grounds for setting aside the decrees in proper proceedings on proof of prejudice to the minor.[6]

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the consent of a guardian cannot be presumed merely from the fact that a notice under O. 21, R. 22 has been issued to him.[7] The Chief Court of Oudh, has also held that a person who is named as guardian but who does not appear in the suit cannot be said to have consented to be appointed as guardian.[8] Where, however, the guardian has had an opportunity to object to his appointment and does not do so, the consent, according to the Allahabad High Court can be presumed.[9] See also the amendments to this rule made by the various High Courts.

9. Officer of Court as guardian ad litem—Sub-R. 4.—Where the proposed guardian does not appear[1] or declines the guardianship,[2] the proper procedure is to apply to the Court for the appointment of an officer of the Court as guardian. The Court should however appoint an officer of the Court as guardian only when there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian.[3] But the fact that a Court guardian was appointed without any enquiry as to whether there was any other person fit and willing to act as guardian[4] or the fact that the appointment of Court guardian was obtained by the fraud of the opposite party, instead of another who could have conducted the case better on behalf of the minor[5] is only an irregularity which will not render the decree null and void though it may be a ground for setting the decree aside if the minor is shown to have been prejudiced by such irregularity.

Where a Court guardian is appointed the Court may provide for the payment of the costs to be incurred by him in conducting the proceedings on behalf of the minor.[6] Where the Court guardian is not put in possession of any funds for defending the suit with the result that defences open to the minor are not raised, the decree can be avoided by the minor in appropriate proceedings.[7]

10. Wishes of the minor if should be considered.—The wishes of the minor should, if possible, be considered and given due weight in the matter of the appointment of a person as his next friend[1] or guardian ad litem.[2] This is the reason why notice is to be given to the minor. See Note 11 to R. 3.

12. Leave to sue or defend on behalf of a minor.—Under the present rule leave to sue or defend is necessary only in cases where there is already a guardian for the minor appointed or declared by a competent authority and some other person wishes to represent the minor as the next friend or guardian ad litem. But the absence of a formal order granting leave to sue is not necessarily fatal to the suit.[1]

For cases under the Bengal Minors Act (XL of 1858) and the Bombay Minors Act (XX of 1864) (both of them now repealed by Act VIII of 1890) the provisions whereof required the granting of a permission or a certificate to sue on behalf of the minor, see the following cases.[2]

Representation of minor by next friend or guardian for the suit.

R. 5. [Ss. 441, 444.] (1) Every application to the Court on behalf of a minor, other than an application under rule 10, sub-rule (2), shall be made by his next friend or by his guardian for the suit.

(2) Every order made in a suit or on any application, before the Court in or by which a minor is in any way concerned or affected, without such minor being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit, as the case may be, may be discharged, and, where the pleader of the party at whose instance such order was obtained knew, or might reasonably have known, the fact of such minority, with costs to be paid by such pleader.

Synopsis.

1. Who may apply.

3. Appointment of guardian ad litem how long continues.
4. Pleader's liability for costs.
5. Suit for custody of minor.

1. Who may apply.—Sub-R. 1 of the rule enacts that every application on behalf of a minor other than an application under R. 10, sub-R. 2 shall be made by his next friend or guardian. An application by a guardian who has been discharged by the Court is thus not valid and ought to be rejected.[1] Where before a guardian is appointed for a minor defendant in a suit, it was found necessary to apply for the transfer of the suit to another Court, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the next friend of the minor could make such an application on behalf of the minor plaintiff.[2]

2. Effect of an application without a next friend or guardian.—It has been seen in Note 5 to R. 3 above that where a minor is not represented in a suit, the decree passed against him is a nullity. On the same principle an order made on an application without the minor being properly represented therein by a next friend or guardian does not bind the minor.[1] Sub-R. 2 provides that such an order may be discharged.

3. Appointment of guardian ad litem how long continues.—Where a guardian ad litem has once been appointed, his appointment enures for the whole of the lis in all its ramifications unless and until it is revoked by the Court, or the guardian dies or retires.[1] The appointment continues for

It has been held that the Deputy Registrar of the High Court who has been appointed guardian ad litem ceases to represent the minor as soon as the appeal to the Privy Council is admitted although he can represent the minor in an application for leave to appeal.[4]

Synopsis.

1. Joint Hindu family—Right of manager to withdraw money or give discharge.
2. Payment to next friend without leave.
3. Security for protection of minor's property.

Object of the rule. See Note 1, F.-N. (2).
Remedy against surety—Procedure. See Note 3, Pt. (3).

1. Joint Hindu family—Right of manager to withdraw money or give discharge.—It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Rao, I.L.R. 36 Mad. 295, that where the managing member of a joint Hindu family is himself the next friend or guardian of a minor party "his powers are controlled by the provisions of the law and he cannot do any act in his capacity of father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without leave of the Court". According to the High Court of Madras, these observations apply equally to cases coming under this rule and the karta, who represents minor parties to the suit as their next friend or guardian, cannot, without leave of the Court under this rule, give a valid discharge of the decree or withdraw any monies deposited by the judgment-debtor for the benefit of the minor members.[1] A contrary view was taken in the undermentioned cases,[2] one of which was before the date of the decision of the Privy Council in Ganesha Row's case and the other, though decided after the decision of Ganesha Row's case, did not advert to it. It is submitted that they are not correct.

But the rule will not apply where the managing member is not the next friend or guardian of the minor party. His right to give a discharge on behalf of the family under the Hindu Law is not affected by this rule.[3] According to the High Court of Bombay, where the decree itself dispenses with the separate application and sanction which might be necessary under this rule, and allows the manager to receive the amount so long as he furnishes security, the latter can give a valid discharge without the leave of the Court under this rule.[4]

2. Payment to next friend without leave.—A payment made by the judgment-debtor to the next friend or guardian without the leave of the Court under this rule is not a valid payment and will not prevent the decree from being regarded as a subsisting one.[1]

3. Security for protection of minor's property.—The fact that the next friend or guardian is the manager of a joint Hindu family does not

The words "expressly recorded in the proceedings" are new. See Note 3, infra.

2. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule as well as the other rules of this order are enacted for the protection of minors who are unable to look after their own interests and to whom the Court stands in a quasi tutelary position. The guardians and next friends are not invariably honest, and even if honest, are sometimes careless and occasionally lacking in intelligence. Therefore the duty of safeguarding the interest of the minors, so far as is practicable, is thrown upon the Court.[1]

The rule forbids the next friend or guardian to enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of the minor without the express leave of the Court and by implication requires the Court to consider, in the exercise of its judicial discretion, the propriety of the same in the interests of the minor.[2] But the rule applies only where the minor is a party to a pending suit and not to a case where his interests may be affected by reason of a compromise in a suit to which he is not a party.[3] Nor can a person other than the next friend or guardian compromise the suit on behalf of the minor.[4]

No application for leave is necessary to negotiate the particular terms of a compromise,[5] but such an application is necessary to enter into a compromise. Where such an application is made, the Court will, having regard to the interests of the minor pass a decree in terms thereof under O. 23, R. 3 unless the guardian withdraws his consent or refuses to assent to the compromise before the Court passes the decree.[6] The reason is that the Court cannot force a compromise upon the minor against the wishes of his guardian.[7] But if it appears to the Court that the guardian is acting improperly in refusing to assent to a compromise which is prima facie beneficial to the minor, the Court can, in the interests of the minor, remove the guardian and appoint another.[8]

Sub-R. 2 contemplates the case of a minor on one side ranged against adults on the other. It has no reference to the effect of any compromise between adults alone although the minor may be a party to the suit. A compromise between adults is governed by the general law and not by this rule.[9]

The rule applies to compromises by all guardians including a certificated guardian[10] and a natural guardian. As regards the applicability of the provisions of this rule to other proceedings, see the following cases.[11]

3. "Without the leave of the Court expressly recorded."—The requirement as to leave of the Court is based on the principle that a suit relating to the estate of an infant and for his benefit has the effect of making him a ward of the Court and no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express direction of the Court.[1] The leave of the Court should be express in all cases[2] and cannot be implied from the mere fact that a decree has been passed by the Court adopting the terms of the compromise.[3] As pointed out by Lord Macnaghten in Manohar

Lal v. Jadunath Singh, I.L.R. 28 All. 585 (P.C.) "There ought to be evidence that the attention of the Court was directly called to the fact that the minor was a party to the compromise and it ought to be shown by an order on petition or in some way not open to doubt that the leave of the Court was obtained." The fact that the minor is described as such in the title of the suit and that the terms of the compromise are before the Court is not enough.[4]

The Court should before granting leave exercise a judicial discretion as to the propriety of the compromise in the interests of the minor.[5] In other words, the Court must have materials before it to satisfy its mind that the proposed compromise is for the benefit of the minor.[6] No compromise involving an apparent surrender of the infant's rights ought to be sanctioned by Courts.[7] No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what particular materials a Judge may call for before being satisfied that the compromise is in the interests and for the benefit of the minor. It is a matter for the exercise of judicial discretion in each case.[8] It has been held that an affidavit by the guardian setting forth the terms of the compromise and how he considers them beneficial to the minor should be filed. In heavy cases there should also be an opinion of the counsel, or a statement by the counsel at the bar, that the compromise is a fit and proper one to be sanctioned in the interest of the minor.[9] In the undermentioned case[10] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee called for a certificate from the High Court as regards the propriety of a compromise on behalf of a minor before sanctioning the same, observing that there should be "a clear expression of opinion by the proper Court in India that such a compromise is beneficial one" to the minor. There is a conflict of judicial opinion as to the form and nature of the order granting leave to compromise, under this rule. In Kalavati v. Chedi Lal[11] the High Court of Allahabad held that "the Court should record the fact that such application was made to it, that the terms of the proposed agreement or compromise were considered by the Court and that, having regard to the interests of the minor, the Court granted leave to the making of the agreement or compromise". The High Court of Madras in the undermentioned case[12] also expressed a similar view and held that the order should in terms state that the question of benefit to the minor was considered by the Court. But in a later case[13] the same High Court, however, dissented from that view and held that the order need not, on the face of it, state in so many words that the Court had considered and come to the conclusion that the settlement was for the minor's benefit and that a mere order on the petition saying "granted" implied that the Court had applied its mind on the matter. In Virupax v. Shiddappa[14] Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J. expressed the view that the form of expression used for indicating that the Court granted the leave is of slight importance provided the Court really after a consideration of the circumstances intended to grant the required leave; but Chandavarkar, J., disagreed with this view and held that a mere order of the Court saying "granted" was not a sufficient compliance with the rule. The High Court of Calcutta has expressed conflicting opinions on this point, some decisions[15] following the earlier Madras case, while the case cited below[16] proceeds upon a reasoning similar to that of the later Madras case. The High Courts of Lahore[17] and Patna[18] also hold the same view as that of the later Madras case.

4. Where leave is granted under a mistake.—A compromise is only a contract and if entered into under a misapprehension as to material facts[1] or brought about by the mistake of the parties and of the Court with regard to the subject-matter of the suit[2] is not valid and binding upon the minor even though sanctioned by the Court. See also S. 20 of the Contract Act.

5. Effect of compromise without leave of the Court.—It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Subramania Chetty v. Raja Rajeswara Dorai[1] that the provision making it necessary to obtain the leave of the Court is of great importance for the protection of the interests of the minors, and, in the absence of such leave, a compromise on behalf of the minor cannot be supported. Such a compromise is, however, not a nullity so far as regards parties other than the minor are concerned.[2] As the rule itself says, it is only "voidable against all parties other than the minor". In other words it cannot be avoided by any person other than the minor himself.[3] The minor has an option to ratify or affirm it, or to avoid it in proper proceedings.[4] It has been held in the undermentioned cases[5] that he is bound to set it aside, if at all, in a separate suit or in an application for review, and if this is not done within the period prescribed therefor, the decree will become binding on him and cannot be avoided by him later on. On the other hand it has been held in the cases cited below[6] that such a compromise is absolutely void so far as the minor is concerned and may be treated as such in subsequent proceedings, that it will not operate as res judicata against the minor and that it can be set up by him in defence to a suit against him based on the compromise.

Where a minor seeks to set a compromise decree aside on the ground of want of sanction under this rule, is the Court bound to set it aside without regard to the question whether the minor is prejudiced thereby? There is a conflict of opinion on the point. According to the High Courts of Bombay,[7] Madras[8] and Patna[9] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of

O. 32, R. 7, Notes. 5—7.

Oudh[10] no prejudice need be shown. The High Courts of Allahabad[11] and Lahore[12] have on the other hand held that it is necessary for the minor to establish that he has been prejudiced by the decree, before setting it aside. It is submitted that this latter view is not correct. Where the next friend or guardian has himself not consented to the compromise on behalf of the minor, the compromise is, of course, void in toto.[13]

6. Bond executed by minor and an adult in pursuance of a compromise without the leave of Court.—Where a compromise is entered into without the leave of the Court and in pursuance thereof a minor defendant and an adult party jointly execute a bond, the bond cannot be enforced as against the minor. But the adult co-obligee cannot be exonerated from liability owing to the failure to obtain leave to compromise on behalf of the minor.[1]

7. Compromise by natural guardian, father or managing member of a joint Hindu family.—A father or managing member in a joint Hindu family may in certain circumstances and subject to certain conditions enter into agreements which may be binding on the minor members of the family.[1] But, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (I.L.R. 36 Mad. 295 P.C.) when, in a suit in which the minor is a party the father or managing member is appointed the next friend or guardian of the minor, his powers are controlled by the provisions of the law and he cannot do any act in his capacity as father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without the leave of the Court. "To hold otherwise," their Lordships observed, "would be to defeat the object of the enactment."[2] The same principle will apply to the case of a natural guardian of the minor dealing with minor's interests.[3]

O.32, R.7, Notes 8—10.

8. Compromise by adult members of a Tarwad.—A compromise of a doubtful claim, entered into by the adult members of a Tarwad bona fide and in the interests of the Tarwad is binding on the minor members thereof.[1] But if the Karnavan or adult member happens to be the guardian ad litem or next friend of the minor in a suit then on the principles mentioned in Note 7 above leave of the Court is necessary before he can enter into a compromise binding on the minor.

8-a. Compromise by adult members of a joint Hindu family.—In Rameswar Prasad v. Ram Bahadur Singh, (I.L.R. 34 Cal. 70, P.C.), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that where a compromise was entered into by the adult co-parceners in a joint Hindu family in a pending litigation in which the minor co-parcener had no interest separate from that of the adult members of the family and the Court pronounced the compromise beneficial to the minor, the compromise was binding on the minor.

9. Compromise by the Court of Wards on behalf of the ward.—It has been held that in cases coming under the Bengal Court of Wards Act (IX of 1879) no leave of the Court is necessary for entering into a compromise on behalf of the minor.[1] The reason is that S. 51 of that Act makes it obligatory on the Civil Court to recognise the Court of Wards as the next friend or the guardian as the case may be in a suit by or against the minor. Further, S. 18 of that Act itself gives power to the Court of Wards to enter into a compromise on behalf of the ward. Rule 16 of this Order also contains a saving clause in respect of local laws.[2]

10. Agreement to be bound by oath, if a compromise.—An offer by the next friend or the guardian as the case may be of a minor, to be bound by the evidence given on oath by the opposite party or his witness under S. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), does not amount to an agreement or compromise within the meaning of this rule and no leave of the Court is necessary in such a case.[1] The evidence so given is binding upon the minor under S. 11 of that Act unless there is fraud or gross negligence on the part of the guardian in the conduct of the suit which results in prejudice to the minor.[2]

But an offer by the guardian ad litem, to suffer a decree on the oath of the plaintiff would amount to a compromise and if not sanctioned by the Court is not binding on the minor.[3]

11. Abandonment of issue—If a compromise.—The abandonment or giving up an issue on the part of the next friend or guardian ad litem in the course of the conduct of the suit does not amount to a compromise within the meaning of this rule and therefore no leave of the Court is necessary. Such abandonment will bind the minor unless the guardian is proved to be guilty of fraud or gross negligence.[1]

12. Withdrawal of suit.—A withdrawal of a suit by the next friend of a minor plaintiff in pursuance of an agreement or compromise entered into with the defendant can only be made with the leave of the Court; otherwise it will be voidable at the instance of the minor.[1] Applications to allow a suit or appeal to be withdrawn where there are parties who are not sui juris are not granted without grave consideration. In the undermentioned case[2] the Judicial Committee granted leave to withdraw an appeal only after being assured by the counsel at the bar that the terms on which it was proposed to be withdrawn were beneficial to the minor. But a mere withdrawal of a suit not in pursuance of any agreement or compromise does not come within the purview of this rule although such a withdrawal is open to attack by the minor on the ground of fraud or collusion or gross negligence on the part of the next friend.[3]

13. Compromise in execution proceedings.—See Note 2 to Order 32, General.

14. Transfer, without leave, of decree in favour of minor.—The provisions of this rule apply also to a compromise entered into even after a decree has been passed, and an adjustment of a decree to which a minor is a party is not binding on the minor unless leave of the Court has been obtained therefor.[1] On the same principle a transfer of a decree obtained in favour of a minor is not binding on the minor unless leave of the Court has been obtained for such transfer.[2]

15. Agreement to refer to arbitration.—This rule does not apply to references made without the intervention of the Court, inasmuch as there is no suit pending in such cases.[1] A decree passed on an award passed on such a reference and filed into Court under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule is not bad for want of sanction, though it may not be binding on the minor

for other reasons.[2] But an application made under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule is a suit and, if, during the pendency thereof the guardian agrees, not to object to the filing of the award, the agreement must, like any other agreement, be sanctioned by the Court.[3]

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this rule applies to agreements to refer to arbitration made pending suit. The general consensus of opinion in all the Courts except the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta, is that this rule applies to such cases and that the leave of the Court is necessary.[4] According to the High Court of Allahabad the provisions as to arbitration proceedings are self-contained and this rule does not apply to such proceedings.[5] The High Court of Calcutta has taken conflicting views on the matter.[6] It is submitted that the Allahabad view cannot be accepted as correct.

16. Compromise when can be set aside.—A compromise in order to be valid and binding upon the minor must fulfil the following conditions:—

(1) The leave of the Court must have been expressly obtained. (See Note 3.)

(2) It should have been granted by the Court after the exercise of a judicial discretion as regards the propriety of the compromise in the interests of the minor. (See also Note 3.)

(3) It should not be vitiated by fraud or mistake. (See Note 4.)

O. 32, R. 7. Notes 16—18.

(4) There must be proper representation of the minor by the next friend or guardian ad litem. He should not have been guilty of fraud or gross negligence in the matter of compromise. (See Note 17 and 18 below.)

(5) The minor should have continued to be a minor till the passing of the compromise decree. (See Note 19 below.)

17. Gross negligence of next friend or guardian.—As has been seen in Notes 12 and 13 to R. 3 ante gross negligence on the part of the next friend or guardian ad litem, if established, will entitle the minor to avoid any decree passed against him. There must be the strictest good faith on the part of the guardian and his acts must be based on considerations of actual necessity and advantage to the minor and not on calculations of any possible benefit.[1] It is his duty to place the Court in possession of all essential and material facts, and any concealment thereof would amount to constructive fraud.[2] But if he acts bona fide and compromises a doubtful claim with the leave of the Court, the compromise would be binding on the minor.[3] See also Note 5 to R. 9 below.

18. Fraud.—A compromise duly entered into by the guardian and sanctioned by the Court in the exercise of its discretion will not be disturbed except upon very strong grounds.[1] The grounds must be such “as to amount to fraud in the party claiming the benefit of the compromise, meaning by fraud, not moral fraud but what in the eye of this Court is considered as amounting to fraud . . . . If there be no fraud and equal knowledge on both sides, the compromise cannot be disturbed, but if there is knowledge on one side which is withheld, the compromise cannot stand, because the withholding of knowledge amounts, in the view of a Court of equity, to fraud.”[1-a] The question is not whether the Court was satisfied with the information before it and could have called for further information, but, whether “the parties having had this further information in their possession were justified in withholding it”.[2] Fraud, however, must be strictly proved. A man cannot complain of fraud simply because he regrets a bargain entered into with open eyes. Nor can a minor attack a compromise sanctioned by the Court on his behalf on the ground of fraud on the Court unless he can prove not merely that the compromise was not profitable to him or that his opponent put forward a false plea but also that the Court was deceived either by that plea or about the facts of the case or was deceived into believing that the compromise had been accepted by the minor's guardian or next friend with free consent and knowledge of the facts when it had not been so accepted.[3]

If the next friend or guardian is proved to be guilty of fraud or collusion then the compromise entered into by him and the decree passed thereon will not bind the minor.[4]

19. Minor attaining majority pending suit.—If the defendant who is a minor attains majority during the pendency of suit, a compromise entered into by the guardian subsequently is not binding on the minor even though sanctioned by Court.[1] But the High Court of Lahore[2] has taken a contrary view, which it is submitted is not correct.

20. Procedure to set aside a compromise decree.—A minor can file a separate suit to set aside the compromise decree or file an application for review in the same suit.[1] He cannot take any objection as to the validity of the decree in appeal as no appeal lies from a consent decree under the present Code (vide S. 96, sub-S. 3).[2] Nor can the validity of the decree be attacked in execution proceedings.[3] See also Note 5 above.

If a compromise decree is set aside at the instance of the minor, the effect of it would be to remit the minor to his original position in the suit.[4]

Synopsis.

1. Retirement of next friend.

Subsequent appointment of guardian under Guardian and Wards Act—Suit to set aside decree on that ground—If lies. See Note 1, F.-N. (1).

1. Retirement of next friend.—The provisions of sub-R. (1) are mandatory. The mere fact that a guardian of the person and property of the minor plaintiff is appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), during the pendency of the suit superseding the next friend, will not amount to a valid retirement in the absence of any application on the part of the next friend.[1]

O. 32, R. 9.

R. 9. [S. 446.] (1) Where the interest of the next friend of a minor is adverse to that of the minor or where he is so connected with a defendant whose interest is adverse to that of the minor as to make it unlikely that the minor's interest will be properly protected by him, or where he does not do his duty, or, during the pendency of the suit, ceases to reside within British India, or for any other sufficient cause, application may be made on behalf of the minor or by a defendant for his removal; and the Court, if satisfied of the sufficiency of the cause assigned, may order the next friend to be removed accordingly, and make such other order as to costs as it thinks fit.

Removal of next friend.

(2) Where the next friend is not a guardian appointed or declared by an authority competent in this behalf, and an application is made by a guardian so appointed or declared, who desires to be himself appointed in the place of the next friend, the Court shall remove the next friend unless it considers, for reasons to be recorded by it, that the guardian ought not to be appointed the next friend of the minor, and shall thereupon appoint the applicant to be next friend in his place upon such terms as to the costs already incurred in the suit as it thinks fit.

3. Adverse interest of next friend.
4. Appeal after the expiry of limitation period.
5. Non-appearance of next friend.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The words "and make such order as to costs as it thinks fit" in sub-R. (1) have been newly added.
2. In sub-R. (2), the words "and shall thereupon appoint the applicant, etc.", are also new.

2. Where the next friend does not do his duty.—The next friend is liable to be removed under this rule if he fails to do his duty,[1] or if he ceases to reside in British India and leaves the country.[2] Where the Court finds that the next friend does not do his duty in relation to the suit, it should not permit him to prejudice the interest of the minor but should adjourn the suit in order that some one interested in the minor may apply on behalf of the minor for the removal of the next friend and the appointment of a new next friend, or in order that the minor plaintiff himself may, on coming of age, elect to proceed with the suit or withdraw from it.[3] Similarly, as seen in Note 2 to R. 7 if the next friend refuses improperly to assent to a compromise which is clearly beneficial to the minor steps may be taken to remove him.[4]

3. Adverse interest of next friend.—If the next friend has an interest adverse to that of the minor plaintiff or his personal interests will come into conflict with his duty towards the minor, he can be removed under this rule.[1]

4. Appeal after the expiry of limitation period.—Where a decree is passed against the minor and the interest of the minor requires that it should

Synopsis.

1. Removal or death of next friend.

1. Removal or death of next friend.—The suit does not abate by reason of the death of the next friend. The Court should either appoint a new next friend or keep the suit pending till the minor attains majority. An order dismissing the suit is a nullity.[1] The same rule will apply where the minors are appellants and their guardian dies pending appeal.[2] Where, however, the decision is given in favour of the minor it is not, on the principle mentioned in Note 1 to O. 32, void by reason merely of the omission to appoint a fresh guardian for him.[3]

Synopsis.

1. Retirement of guardian.
2. Removal of guardian.
3. Appointment of new guardian on removal, retirement or death of guardian.
4. Costs.

Guardian unable to find funds—Permission to retire. See Note 1, F.-N. (1).

Notice to minor—For appointment of new guardian. See Note 3, Pt. (4).

1. Retirement of guardian.—When once a guardian has been duly appointed, he cannot retire except with the leave of the Court.[1] The Court is not bound to grant permission to retire whenever the guardian wishes to do so. It has a discretion to refuse the permission in a proper case.[2]

A mere statement on the part of the guardian that he declines to act has not the effect of removal unless sanctioned by the Court.[3]

2. Removal of guardian.—It is the duty of the Court to protect the interests of a minor. A guardian is appointed for that purpose and for that purpose alone. If the Court finds that the guardian is not acting properly, it would be its duty to remove him in the interests of the minor.[1]

3. Appointment of new guardian on removal, retirement or death of guardian.—It is the duty of the Court to appoint a new guardian where the guardian ad litem dies[1] or retires or is removed by the Court. Where the guardian of a minor respondent dies pending appeal a decree obtained against him without appointing a fresh guardian for him would, on general principles, be a nullity,[2] though a decree obtained in favour of the minor would not.[3] See Note 1 to O. 32.

It has been held by the High Court of Patna that no notice to minors is necessary before an order of fresh appointment is made.[4]

The power of the Court under this sub-rule may be exercised at any time during the pendency of the suit and the same is not taken away by the fact that an order to try the suit ex parte has been previously passed.[5] The powers of the Court under this rule are exercisable by the Registrar under S. 105 of the Rangoon Small Cause Court Act (VII of 1920).

4. Costs.—S. 35, ante empowers the Court to make an order as to costs against any party to the suit, while this rule empowers the Court to pass an order for costs against the guardian ad litem who is not a party to the suit.[1] This rule cannot be construed so as to restrict the operation of S. 35 and, therefore, when the guardian ad litem is himself a party to the suit, the Court has power apart from the provisions of this rule to make an order for costs against him.[2]

Where the guardian takes upon himself to file an unnecessary and unsuccessful appeal on behalf of his ward,[3] or where he is guilty of gross misconduct in the conduct of the case,[4] the Court will order him to pay the costs.

R. 12. [Ss. 450 to 453.] (1) A minor plaintiff or a minor not a party to a suit on whose behalf an application is pending shall, on attaining majority, elect whether he will proceed with the suit or application.

(2) Where he elects to proceed with the suit or application, he shall apply for an order discharging the next friend and for leave to proceed in his own name.

(3) The title of the suit or application shall in such case be corrected so as to read henceforth thus :—

(4) Where he elects to abandon the suit or application, he shall, if a sole plaintiff or sole applicant, apply for an order to dismiss the suit or application on re-payment of the costs incurred by the defendant or opposite party or which may have been paid by his next friend.

Non-compliance with rule—Ratification—Effect. See Note 1, Pt. (5).

1. Scope of the rule.—The rule is based on the substantive right of a person who has become sui juris to himself proceed with a suit instituted on his behalf during his minority.[1] The Court should as a matter of course give him leave to proceed or act in his own name and cannot ignore his application.[2] Where it is discovered in the course of the suit or appeal that the minor has attained majority the Court cannot dismiss the suit or appeal for default but should issue notice to the quondam minor to elect whether he intends to proceed with the suit or appeal.[3] If he elects to continue the suit his rights should be determined as on the date on which the suit was originally instituted.[4] Where the minor continues to be represented bona fide by a pleader even after his attaining majority and subsequently the quondam minor ratifies such acts, they cannot be treated as invalid on the ground of non-compliance with this rule.[5]

2. Title to be corrected.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the provision of this rule requiring the title of the suit to be corrected applies only where the suit is pending and not to proceedings taken after a final decree has been passed in the suit.[1]

3. Minor defendant becoming a major during the pendency of suit.—No provision has been made in the Code in respect of a minor defendant attaining majority during the pendency of the suit. The reason for the omission is that while a plaintiff on becoming a major can, as a dominus litis, elect either to go on, or put an end to, the litigation, the defendant has no such choice available to him and the suit must proceed against him notwithstanding he becomes a major. The minor defendant who comes of age may if he thinks fit come on the record and conduct the defence himself. If, however, he does not do so, he must be deemed to have elected to abide by the representation of the

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule deals with the procedure to be followed where a minor plaintiff becomes a major and considers that the suit instituted on his behalf was improper or unreasonable. The Court can in such cases order the next friend to pay the costs of all the parties if it is satisfied as to the impropriety or unreasonableness alleged. But no order as to costs can be made after the death of the next friend.[1]

1. Persons of unsound mind.—The present rule places persons of unsound mind in the same position as that of minors and makes the provisions of Rr. 1 to 14 applicable to them. Hence a suit on behalf of a person of unsound mind has to be filed by a next friend and where the defendant is of unsound mind the Court has to appoint a guardian ad litem.[1]

2. Mental infirmity.—The corresponding section in the old Code was applicable only to persons of unsound mind. Now the scope of the rule has been widened by the addition of the words "or mental infirmity". The result is that even a person of weak mind can sue through a next friend provided the Court is satisfied that he is incapable of protecting his interests.[1] The High Court of Lahore[2] has held that the rule applies also to persons who are absolutely deaf and dumb.

The fact that a person of high position has renounced the world and become a Sanyasi neglecting worldly affairs would not, of itself, justify the Court in holding that by reason of unsoundness of mind and mental infirmity he was incapable of protecting his interests, within the meaning of this rule. But a persistent delusion of being haunted by demons, of persecution by imaginery voices and religious megalomania which makes him regard himself as destined to be in some sort a saviour of the world are symptoms which would justify the conclusion that the person is suffering from delusional insanity and incapable of managing his own affairs.[3]

3. Persons adjudged to be of unsound mind.—A person can be adjudged to be of unsound mind under the provisions of the Lunacy Act, IV of 1912. For cases under the Lunacy Act and evidence relating to lunacy, see the following cases.[1]

4. Persons of unsound mind not so adjudged.—The old section applied only to "persons of unsound mind adjudged to be so under Act XXXV of 1858 or under any other law for the time being in force." And even so, the decisions under the old Code held that the Court had inherent power to appoint a guardian for persons of unsound mind though not so adjudged.[1]

Now, the legislature has given effect to these decisions by providing also for cases of persons not so adjudged. If the defendant alleges that he is of unsound mind, and the plaintiff denies it the Court must hold a judicial enquiry and come to a finding as to whether he is incapable of protecting his own interests.[2] A finding in the lunacy proceedings that a person is not of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs does not preclude a finding under the present rule that the same person is by reason of mental infirmity incapable of protecting his interests in the suit.[3]

5. Appointment of next friend or guardian for persons of unsound mind.—As already seen, the Court is bound to appoint a next friend or guardian in the case of persons of unsound mind. If he is not represented by a guardian in the suit, the decree will be null and void.[1] See also Note 5 to R. 3. Where a manager of the property of the lunatic has been appointed under the Lunacy Act such person ought to be appointed as the next friend or guardian ad litem in the suit.[2] See also R. 4, sub-R. (2).

6. Decree against lunatic not represented if can be challenged in execution proceedings.—As already seen in Note 5 to R. 3, having regard to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rashid-un-nissa v. Muhammad Ismail, [I.L.R. 31 All. 572, (P.C.)] an objection as to want of proper representation is not one falling under S. 47 of the Code and cannot be raised in execution proceedings inasmuch as the person not represented cannot be deemed to be a party to the suit.[1]

Continuing a suit as a pauper. See Note 2, Pt. (1).

1. Suit by Paupers.—The State derives a revenue from Court-fee stamps, and a plaintiff suing in Courts is, under the Court Fees Act, 1870, bound to pay the Court-fee prescribed, at the time of filing the plaint. But in view of the fact that there may be persons who, by reason of their poverty, are unable to pay the fee, provisions have been enacted in this Order exempting such persons from paying, in the first instance, the Court-fee prescribed and allowing them to prosecute their suits in forma pauperis.[1] But if such pauper succeeds in the suit, the Government can recover the amount of Court-fee, as a first charge, from out of the subject-matter of the suit. (See R. 10.) And even if the plaintiff fails in the suit the Court should order him under R. 11, infra to pay the Court-fees due by him.

The executor of a deceased person is entitled to obtain a probate in forma pauperis, though the petition for grant of probate is not a suit in the ordinary sense unless caveat is entered.[2]

The provisions of this order are not applicable to proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926) and the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908).

2. Suit may be "instituted" by a pauper.—It is competent to the Court to allow a suit not originally instituted in forma pauperis to be continued in forma pauperis.[1]

3. "Is not possessed of sufficient means."—The explanation to this rule furnishes two different tests to determine the pauperism of a person[1]:—

(1) Where a fee is prescribed by Law for the plaint in a suit, a person who is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay such fee is a pauper for the purposes of that suit. Thus where a claim requires a Court-fee of Rs. 1,775 and the applicant is possessed of means to the extent of Rs. 1,600, only, he is a pauper for the purposes of that suit.[2]

(2) Where no such fee is prescribed[3] a person who is not entitled to property worth one hundred rupees other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the suit, is a pauper for the purposes of that suit.[3-a]

A person may be entitled to property but may nevertheless be not possessed of sufficient means to pay the Court-fee. It cannot, therefore, be assumed that everyone who is entitled to property, is possessed of means to the value of that property.[4] Where, though a person is entitled to property, yet if it is out of his reach and is thus not a realisable asset, or convertible into cash, it cannot be said that he is possessed of sufficient means to pay the Court-fee.[5] Thus a mere finding that the applicant is jointly interested in a property with another, but over which he has no dominion, would only show that he is entitled to property but not that he is possessed of means.[6]

The word "means" is, according to the High Court of Lahore intended to cover and include all forms of realisable assets, which can be converted into cash, and as such can be used for financing the litigation.[7] Thus, according to that Court, it would include an interest in a decree[8] or a mortgage[9] in favour of the petitioner. The High Court of Calcutta has, on the other hand, held that a debt which is due from a third person cannot be said to be "means" of which the applicant is possessed, and that the words "is not possessed of" must mean that the applicant has no actual control over it.[10] According to the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur, a person owning a non-transferable occupancy right which is not capable of conversion into money cannot be considered to be "possessed of means" for the purposes of this rule.[11]

Where the applicant himself is proved to be a pauper he is entitled to the benefit of the rule and the fact that he has co-heirs who are men of means is immaterial.[12]

The burden of proving that a person is a pauper within the meaning of the explanation lies on the applicant.[13]

4. "Where no such fee is prescribed."—See Note 3 above.

5. When he is not entitled to property.—See Note 3 above.

It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur, that interest of the tenant of a non-transferable occupancy holding is not "property" but is more in the nature of an expectant claim under an inchoate right.[1]

6. Subject-matter of the suit, if can be considered in deciding sufficient means.—The words "other than his necessary wearing apparel or the subject-matter of the suit" do not qualify the first part of the explanation, but apply only to cases where no specific Court-fee is prescribed.[1] But this does not mean that in dealing with the first part of the explanation the subject-matter has always to be taken into consideration.[2] The subject-matter of the suit may, in some cases, be in the possession of the petitioner and in some cases, not. In the former class of cases it cannot be excluded from consideration merely on the ground that it forms the subject-matter of the suit.[3] Thus where A files a suit for certain ornaments in the possession of B and obtains a decree and B applies for leave to appeal in forma pauperis, the ornaments in her possession will have to be taken into account in determining whether she has sufficient means to pay the Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal.[4] In the latter class of cases the subject-matter of the suit cannot be taken into consideration. The reason is that the word "possession" sufficiently indicates that any amount which forms the subject-matter of the suit and is not in the actual possession of the petitioner, cannot be taken into account for the purpose of determining his means.[5]

Now suppose that, in answer to an application by a plaintiff to sue as a pauper, the defendant admits a part of the liability and produces or offers to produce into Court the property or the amount in discharge of such liability, can it be considered in determining whether the plaintiff is a pauper or not? The High Courts of Bombay[6] and Calcutta[7] have held that, in such a case, the time when the application for leave to sue as a pauper, is made is the point of time which the Court has to consider in determining whether the petitioner is a pauper. The High Court of Madras has, on the other hand, held that if at the time of the hearing of the application he has become possessed of sufficient means, the Court has no jurisdiction to grant him leave to sue as a pauper.[8] It has also been held by that High Court in the undermentioned case[9] that where the plaintiff gets a decree in the lower Court, but wants to appeal as a pauper for a higher amount, the amount deposited in Court by the judgment-debtor to the credit of the plaintiff in pursuance of the decree should be taken into consideration in determining whether he should be allowed to appeal as a pauper.

7. Necessary wearing apparel.—According to the High Court of Calcutta, ornaments which a woman ordinarily wears should be regarded as being in the nature of wearing apparel.[1] The High Court of Lahore appears to dissent from the above view.[2]

8. Minor plaintiff.—Where an application is filed on behalf of a minor for leave to sue in forma pauperis the circumstances of the next friend should not be considered; the fact that the next friend is possessed of sufficient means will not disentitle a minor plaintiff from suing in forma pauperis.[1]

O. 33, R. 1, Notes 9—11.

Nor will the fact that such next friend is himself a pauper disentitle him from suing on behalf of the minor in forma pauperis.[2]

9. Pauper defendant.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in the undermentioned cases[1] that a defendant may, under the inherent powers of the Court, be allowed to defend a suit in forma pauperis, although there is no provision to that effect in the Code. But the Chief Court of Punjab has taken a contrary view.[2] The High Court of Rangoon also has taken a view contrary to that of the Calcutta High Court. It has further held that, in any case, the Court has no inherent power to allow a party to prosecute in forma pauperis an application for review of an order passed in appeal.[3]

10. "Person"—Meaning of.—The word "person" occurring in the explanation to this rule has not been defined in this Code. According to the definition given in the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) it includes not only individual human beings but also companies or associations or bodies of individuals whether incorporated or not. It has, therefore, been held by the High Court of Madras that the word "person" indicates a juridical person.[1] But the High Court of Rangoon has, however, held that it means a natural person, that is, a human being and that it does not include a juridical person.[2] Even according to this view, a firm can be considered to be a person. Thus, where a firm brings a suit for damages and afterwards becomes insolvent and the Official Assignee refuses to prosecute the suit and the suit is dismissed, the firm can be granted leave to appeal as a pauper.[3]

11. Suit by executor, administrator or legal representative of pauper.—The High Court of Madras has held that an executor or an administrator or the legal representative of a deceased person is entitled to institute or maintain or continue a suit in forma pauperis in his representative capacity, provided he has not come into possession of sufficient means out of the estate of the deceased.[1] It proceeds on the view that the plaintiff in his private capacity and in the capacity of the representative are two different persons in the eye of the law. The High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta have taken a contrary view that he could not do so, unless and until it was shown that he himself is a pauper.[2] The above view is based on the ground that the provisions of this Code "seem to negative the idea of anybody but an actual pauper, a real pauper, a man without means," being permitted to maintain a suit in forma pauperis. The decisions of the High Court of Lahore are conflicting.[3]

See also Note 10 to O. 22, R. 1 and the undermentioned case.[4]

12. Suit by an official liquidator or Official Receiver.—Applying the definition of the word "person" as mentioned in Note 10, ante, the High Court of Madras has held that the Official Liquidator of a company, though not a pauper himself, may file a suit in forma pauperis on behalf of a pauper company.[1] The High Court of Allahabad has applied the same principle to the case of an Official Receiver of the estate of an insolvent.[2] A contrary view has been taken by the High Court of Rangoon that the word "person" in this rule does not include a juridical person such as a receiver.[3] See also Note 10, ante. It is submitted that this view of the High Court of Rangoon is not correct.

13. Suit by Mutwalli, trustee or Shebait.—As has already been observed in Note 11, ante, the character of a person suing in a representative character must be kept distinct from his personal capacity. Thus, when a plaintiff sues in a representative character, for example as a mutwalli, trustee or a shebait, unless he is in possession of property belonging to the wakf estate or trust or the idol for whom he sues, sufficient to enable him to pay the Court-fee, he may be allowed to sue as a pauper, even if it is shown that he has sufficient personal property of his own.[1]

Where a shebait brought a suit for recovery of endowed property against one who claimed to be the alienee of that property and against three of his co-shebaits who purported to have alienated it and the plaintiff did not either in his personal capacity or in the capacity of a shebait possess sufficient means to pay the Court-fee, it was held that the mere fact that the shebait-defendants possessed sufficient properties belonging to the idol, did not disentitle him from suing as a pauper.[2]

14. Married woman.—The fact that the applicant's husband has got sufficient property to pay the Court-fees due on her plaint is not a ground for refusing the application of a pauper married woman for permission to sue as a pauper.[1]

15. Leave to sue in forma pauperis for removal of trustees.—S. 402 of the old Code imposed certain restrictions on the right to sue as a pauper. It was held under that section that it did not preclude a person, who had obtained leave to sue under S. 18 of the Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863) for the removal of the trustees of a temple, from being permitted to sue in forma pauperis.[1] The said section has now been omitted in this Code.

16. Award of costs and order for security for costs against pauper.—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the Court cannot pass an order for costs against the pauper in interlocutory applications in the suit.[1] The High Court of Rangoon has, on the other hand, held that the Court has power to pass an order for costs against the pauper in such cases.[2]

A woman who has been permitted to sue as a pauper cannot be asked to furnish security for costs under O. 25, R. 1.[3] The reason is that it would render nugatory the order permitting her to sue as a pauper.

An order for security for costs passed in a suit ceases to operate as regards the antecedent costs, if leave is given to continue the suit as a pauper, before the period for furnishing the security has expired.[4]

O. 33, R. 2, Notes 1—4.

It does not, however, follow that this rule is to be meticulously interpreted against the petitioner. The Code is not designed as a trap which a litigant must try to avoid by all means in his power.[3] The object of the rule being to help the Government in ascertaining whether the applicant is in a position to pay the Court-fee payable on the plaint, the Court should not throw out the application unless the omission was an act of bad faith.[4] Thus the application should not be rejected merely on the ground that an item of property has been omitted to be given in the schedule[5] or that the schedule has not been signed and verified by the applicant,[6] or that the applicant was unable to name all the persons in possession of the property left by the deceased in an administration suit.[6-a] The proper course in such cases will be to return the application for amendment,[7] and on such amendment being made, the presentation will be deemed to be a proper presentation as from the date of the original presentation.[7-a]

Where a plaint is filed with a stamp duty and registered as a suit and it is subsequently found that additional Court-fee is required and the plaintiff, thereupon, applies to continue the suit in forma pauperis, the fact that the application is not in the form prescribed by this rule will not necessarily entail the dismissal of the application.[8]

2. Verification.—Where the verification of the statements made in the application is not made in accordance with the provisions of O. VI, R. 15, the Court is bound to reject the application under R. 5, infra.[1] But where the applicant did not verify the contents of the petition at the foot of the petition, but did so by a separate affidavit in which the statements contained in the several paragraphs in the application were said to be true, it was held that the affidavit might be treated as part of the application.[2] The schedule of property need not, however, be signed and verified by the applicant, and in any case, the omission to do so will not, as has been seen in Note 1 above, entail the rejection of the application.

Presentation of application.

R. 3. [S. 404.] Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules, the application shall be presented to the Court by the applicant in person, unless he is exempted from appearing in Court, in which case the application may be presented by an authorized agent who can answer all material questions relating to the application, and who may be examined in the same manner as the party represented by him might have been examined had such party attended in person.

[1877—S. 404; 1859—S. 301.]

Synopsis.

1. Presentation to Court.
2. Presentation by applicant in person.

4. Authorised agent.
5. Presentation of pauper appeals. See Notes to O. 44, R. 1.
6. Limitation. See Notes to R. 7, infra.

1. Presentation to Court.—The insistence in the rule is on the words "in person" and not on the words "to the Court" as meaning "to the judge himself".[1] Therefore where the application is presented to the Sheristadar of the Court[2] or to an officer of the Court who places it before the judge and the petitioner appears before the judge, the presentation will be valid.[3]

2. Presentation by applicant in person.—This rule is mandatory as regards the requirement as to the presentation in person, and a Court is bound to reject under R. 5 an application for leave to sue as a pauper, if it is not presented by the applicant in person, except in cases where he is exempted from appearing in Court.[1] Where one only out of several applicants presents the application in person, the Court should reject the application as against those persons who have not joined in presenting it in person.[2] Where, however, the law, by reason of the fact that personal appearance in Courts is impossible either by reason of the party being a company, or an infant, or a lunatic, allows an appearance by somebody else, an appearance by such person would be sufficient compliance with the law.[3]

The provisions of this rule as regards presentation in person do not apply to a case where a plaint, returned by one Court, is presented to another Court,[4] or where a plaintiff is allowed to continue his suit as a pauper.[5]

If presented by agent, Court may order applicant to be examined by commission.

(2) Where the application is presented by an agent, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that the applicant be examined by a commission in the manner in which the examination of an absent witness may be taken.

2. Right to cross-examine applicant.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule empowers the Court to examine the applicant when the application is duly presented, not only with reference to the question of his pauperism, but also with reference to the merits of the claim in order to ascertain whether the allegations in the petition do or do not show a cause of action.[1] An enquiry under this rule should be made by the judge himself.[2]

1. Legislative changes :—

The clause "when his allegations do not show a cause of action" has been substituted for the clause "that his allegations do not show a right to sue in such Court" which occurred in the old section.

2. Applicability of the rule.—The rule provides that an application for permission to sue as a pauper shall be rejected in the events enumerated in the rule.[1] It is restrictive of the right which every litigant has to seek the aid of a Court of Justice, and should therefore be interpreted strictly.[2]

As in the case of an order rejecting a plaint under O. 7, R. 11, an order of rejection of an application under this rule must be made on preliminary grounds, before notice is issued, and before an enquiry is held into the applicant's pauperism.[3]

3. Clause (a).—See Note 1 to R. 2 and Note 2 to R. 3, supra. Where an applicant had not calculated the value of the suit for purposes of Court-fee in accordance with S. 7 (v) (b) of the Court-Fees Act, it was held that the application was liable to be rejected.[1] But in proper cases the Court has power to allow an application to be amended so as to make it conform to the law.[2]

4. Clause (b).—The question of the applicant's pauperism has to be decided with reference to the definition given in R. 1. The Court in this respect is bound to proceed on the valuation given in the plaint, and cannot go into an investigation of the question, whether the suit has been overvalued.[1] Nor can it go into the merits of the case when dealing with the question of pauperism of the applicant.[2]

Where the applicant is found to be a pauper it is not necessary for the Court to give a finding on the other matters enumerated in the rule, unless it finds that the application has to be rejected for any of the other reasons mentioned therein.[3]

5. Clause (d).—The words used in clause (c) of S. 407 of the old Code were "right to sue." The expression was, however, held not to be limited to questions of jurisdiction alone, but to include a good and "subsisting cause of action, capable of enforcement in Court, and calling for an answer, and not barred by the law of Limitation or any other law."[1] The present clause (d) gives effect to this view by substituting the words "cause of action" for the words "right to sue" so that, the Court has got the power to reject an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis where the claim is prima facie barred by limitation,[2] or is unlawful,[3] or is immoral or opposed to public policy.[4] But in considering the question whether the applicant has a cause of action or not, the Court has to look only into the allegations made by the applicant. This does not mean that the Court should confine itself to the allegations in the petition. It is open to the Court to consider not only the allegations contained in the plaint but also the facts appearing in the examination of the applicant.[5] Beyond this, however, the Court cannot go.[6] In fact, even in an inquiry under R. 7 the Court can confine itself to the evidence of the plaintiff and refuse to go into other evidence.[7] Consequently, complicated questions of limitation,[8] or of res judicata,[9] or of local jurisdiction[9-a] cannot be gone into for deciding the application. Nor can the Court refuse the application on the ground that, on the merits, the litigation is very likely to end in failure.[10] The Court should exercise great caution in considering the question of cause of action inasmuch as the applicant is often without the advantage of the aid of Counsel.[11] Further the opposite party will have the opportunity of urging these very objections under R. 7.[12]

6. Clause (e).—The object of the provisions of this order is to help bona fide litigants. Where, therefore, a litigation is not bona fide, and the plaintiff has been set up by another for the purpose of evading the Court-fee, the Court will not allow him to sue as a pauper.[1]

The clause will apply only if the agreement has reference to the subject-matter of the suit and is of a champertous character.[2] Further, the agreement must be one between the pauper and a third party. Thus, where a Company has gone into liquidation and the liquidator sues in forma pauperis to recover a debt due to the company, the fact that the liquidator is paid a percentage of the collections will not bring the application under this clause.[3]

It is however not necessary that the "interest" should be a vested and completed interest. Thus, an agreement with pleader appearing in the pauper suit, that he is to recover his fee out of the fruits of the decree that may be obtained in that suit by the plaintiff, is within the prohibition of the clause.[4] But a mere agreement to pay the fees when the decree is obtained without any condition by which the pleader could recover the fees from the decretal amount, will not fall under the clause.[5]

7. Appeal.—An order rejecting an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis is not appealable as it is neither a decree nor an order coming within any of the clauses of O. 43, R. 1.[1]

8. Letters Patent Appeal.—An order of a Single Judge of the High Court, sitting on the Original Side, allowing, or refusing to allow, a plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis is a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent and is appealable as such.[1]

Notice of day for receiving evidence of applicant's pauperism.

R. 6. [S. 408.] Where the Court sees no reason to reject the application on any of the grounds stated in rule 5, it shall fix a day (of which at least ten days' clear notice shall be given to the opposite party and the Government pleader) for receiving such evidence as the applicant may adduce in proof of his pauperism, and for hearing any evidence which may be adduced in disproof thereof.

Synopsis.

1. Notice.
2. Evidence of pauperism. See R. 7, infra.

1. Notice.—The provision directing notice is imperative[1] and therefore an order made without notice to the Government pleader or to the opposite party is one made without jurisdiction and is open to revision.[2]

Procedure at hearing.

R. 7. [S. 409.] (1) On the day so fixed or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, the Court shall examine the witnesses (if any) produced by either party, and may examine the applicant or his agent, and shall make a memorandum of the substance of their evidence.

(2) The Court shall also hear any argument which the parties may desire to offer on the question whether, on the face of the application and of the evidence (if any) taken by the Court as herein provided, the applicant is or is not subject to any of the prohibitions specified in rule 5.

1. Scope of the enquiry under this rule.—Two kinds of examinations are contemplated by this Order:—

(1) An examination of the applicant under R. 4, ante, and

(2) An examination under this rule.[1]

It is important to remember the following distinction between the two kinds of examinations:—

(1) An examination under R. 4 takes place before issuing notice to the Government pleader and to the opposite party, while the examination under this rule takes place after such notice. There is thus no cross-examination of the applicant under the former rule.

(2) The examination under R. 4 is only of the applicant and none else, while the examination under this rule may be not only of the applicant but also of his witnesses.

(3) The examination under R. 4 may be in respect of the applicant's pauperism as well as the merits of the case, while the examination under this rule is confined to the question of the applicant's pauperism.[2] It has accordingly been held that a Court has no power to allow the examination of witnesses on questions other than the pauperism of the applicant such as questions as to the existence of a cause of action[3] or as to the title of the applicant to institute the suit[4] or as to limitation[5] or as to res judicata[6] and decide the application on such evidence. It is, however, not clear as to whether, when the applicant is examined under this rule as to his pauperism, he can be cross-examined as to matters relating to the cause of action or limitation.[6-a]

It is only the examination of witnesses on questions other than the pauperism of the applicant that is prohibited by this rule. The Court is not precluded from hearing arguments on the question whether the applicant is or is not subject to any of the prohibitions specified in R. 5.[6-b] But even arguments are confined to the matters specified in R. 5 and the Court has no jurisdiction to reject the applicant on other grounds than those specified.[7] Thus the Court cannot reject the application on the ground that other co-heirs who are not paupers are seeking to establish their rights through the applicant who is admittedly a pauper.[8] Nor can it reject the application on the construction of documents filed by parties[9] or on any complicated questions of law such as limitation, res judicata, etc.[10]

Even if the other party does not offer any arguments as provided under sub-R. (2), the Court is not precluded from considering suo motu if the application is subject to the prohibitions under R. 5.[11] This rule in so far it relates to the manner of taking evidence does not apply to proceedings under the N.W.

4. Limitation when the application is granted.—Where an application to sue in forma pauperis is granted, the suit is deemed to be instituted on the date of the presentation of the application, and not on the date when the applicant is allowed to sue as a pauper.[1] Therefore where an application to sue in forma pauperis was made before the amendment of the Court-Fees Act (Madras Act, 1922), but was registered as a suit after the amendment, the amount of Court-fees to be entered in the decree should be calculated on the basis of the old Court-Fees Act.[2]

As to appeals in forma pauperis, see O. 44, infra.

5. Limitation when application is refused.—Where the application to sue in forma pauperis is rejected, the proceedings come to an end, and if the applicant thereafter brings a regular suit on payment of the Court-fees prescribed, the suit will be deemed to be instituted only on the date when the Court-fees are paid, and not on the date of presentation of the rejected application.[1] As to whether, at the time of refusing the application, the Court can grant time for the payment of the Court-fees on the plaint, and whether if the Court-fees are paid within the time so granted, the suit would be deemed to be instituted on the date of the presentation of the application, see Note 10 to S. 149, supra, and the case cited below.[2]

As to appeals in forma pauperis, see O. 44, R. 1, Note 7, infra.

6. Limitation when application is converted into a plaint on payment of Court-fee.—Where during the pendency of an application to sue as a pauper, the applicant pays the Court-fee in respect of the plaint, and thereupon the plaint is registered as a suit, does the institution of the suit date back to the date of presentation of the application? Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Skinner v. Orde[1] observed: "The petition is filed, and proceedings are taken to enquire into the pauperism, which are delayed by various orders of the Court . . . . until a very considerable period of time has elapsed. Then, pending that enquiry, the plaintiff by paying the amount of stamp-fees into Court, admits he is no longer desirous to sue as a pauper, and gives up so much of the prayer of his petition as asks to be allowed so to sue, but no more . . . . to commence de novo? . . . . . The plaint is not converted into a plaint from that time only, but remains with its original date on the file of the Court, ... In their view . . . . . . the suit must be deemed to be instituted when the application was filed''. Though Skinner v. Orde was decided under the Code of 1859, the principle has been followed in cases arising under the later Codes, and it has been held that where the application is bona fide, the suit will be deemed to be instituted on the date of the application to sue in forma pauperis and not on the date, when the Court-fees are paid.[2] But if the application is mala fide and it is found that the applicant was, even at the time of the application, possessed of means to pay the Court-fees, the suit will be deemed to be instituted only on the date on which Court-fees are paid, and not on the date when the application was presented.[3]

The final order, on such an application of a Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court is however a "judgment" under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and is therefore appealable as such.[3]

Stamp duty and penalty—Not governed by this rule. See Note 4, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—The application to sue as a pauper cannot be deemed to be a plaint till leave to sue is granted, and therefore the Court has no jurisdiction to order the return of the plaint under the provisions of O. 7, R. 10 for presentation to the proper Court.[1] See also Note 6 to O. 7, R. 10. Until the leave is granted, there is no suit in existence,[2] and, therefore, the Court cannot direct an attachment of properties before judgment.[3] See also Note 5 to O. 38, R. 5.

Where a plaint is filed with insufficient Court-fee, and the plaintiff being unable to pay the additional Court-fee applies to continue the suit in forma pauperis it has been held that the Court has to ascertain if the plaint discloses a cause of action, and then to direct an enquiry into the pauperism of the applicant. If he is found to be a pauper, he should be allowed to continue the suit as a pauper, as the procedure under Rr. 2 and 8 is impossible under such circumstances.[4]

2. Limitation when application is granted.—See R. 7, ante.

Dispaupering.

R. 9. [S. 414.] The Court may, on the application of the defendant, or of the Government pleader, of which seven days' clear notice in writing has been given to the plaintiff, order the plaintiff to be dispaupered—

(a) if he is guilty of vexatious or improper conduct in the course of the suit;

O. 33, R. 9, Notes 1—4.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule applies to cases where the suit is pending, and therefore the plaintiff cannot be dispaupered after the suit or appeal has been disposed of on a settlement between the parties.[1]

2. "Vexatious or improper conduct".—A fraudulent concealment of property will amount to vexatious or improper conduct, but a mere omission to state in the list of assets a life insurance policy worth about Rs. 245 where the Court-fee to be paid on the plaint was over Rs. 500 was held not to be a sufficient ground to dispauper the plaintiff under this rule.[1] Intentional delay in prosecuting proceedings such as failure to bring the legal representatives of a deceased defendant on the record within a reasonable time may amount to vexatious or improper conduct within the meaning of this rule.[2]

3. "Ought not to continue to sue as a pauper".—The plaintiff cannot be dispaupered under this rule on the ground that he was in receipt of an interim allowance during the suit barely sufficient for his maintenance,[1] or that he had a rich relation,[2] or that he appeared by an eminent counsel.[3] Where it is proved that the applicant has received a sum of money sufficient to pay the Court-fee after the date of the application he ceases to be a pauper and the fact that the money was paid to a creditor will not prevent the Court from holding that he is no longer a pauper.[4]

4. "Agreement with reference to the subject-matter".—See also Note 6 to R. 5 above.

This clause is intended to prevent the prosecution of a suit where the plaintiff has entered into a champertous agreement with another for the prosecution of the litigation[1] and also to prevent a party continuing his suit as a pauper even after a third party has acquired an interest in the subject-matter, and therefore an interest in paying Court-fees to Government.[2] Thus an agreement by the plaintiff with his advocate promising to pay him a large sum of money in the event of his success was held to amount to such an agreement as is contemplated by Cl. (c) of this rule.[3] But this clause does not apply to cases where the parties have settled their differences in order to put an end to litigation.[4]

Pauper succeeding only in part. See Note 1, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule and the next are intended to secure to the Government its rights to Court fees, the payment of which is temporarily suspended when the plaintiff is permitted to sue in forma pauperis.[1] This rule deals with the case of a pauper plaintiff who succeeds in the suit and R. 11 deals with the case of a pauper plaintiff who fails in the suit. No provision has been made in the Code for the case of a plaintiff succeeding in part and failing in part. In the absence of any such provision, presumably the Court is intended to deal with the case by combining the provisions of the two rules and by appropriating the Court-fees payable between the plaintiff and the defendant in proportion to the extent of success of each party.[1-a] The High Courts of Allahabad,[2] Madras[3] and Patna[4] have held that it is not open to the Court to direct the defendant to pay Court-fees exceeding the amount which would be payable on that portion of the plaintiff's claim on which the plaintiff succeeds. The High Court of Calcutta[5] has on the other hand, held that this rule leaves the discretion entirely with the Court to direct which of the parties should pay the Court-fees due to the Government and that the Court should not be fettered by any hard and fast rule but must only be guided by the equities of the case.

As has been seen already this rule is applicable only where the plaintiff succeeds in the suit. Where, in a pauper suit, the amount decreed to the plaintiff, fell short of the amount payable by him as costs to the defendant, he was held not to have succeeded within the meaning of this rule because, so far as the plaintiff was concerned the decree was, in the result, not a success in view of O. 21, R. 19 of the Code.[6]

This rule is applicable also to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their Original Civil Jurisdiction.[7]

2. Amount of Court-fees to be a first charge.—The Court-fee payable to the Government under this rule is a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit.[1] "The Crown has a right to receive certain fees at the institution of every suit; it temporarily foregoes its right in the case of pauper plaintiffs, and places means in their hands to proceed to judgment against their defendants. Without the forbearance of the Government to insist on its ordinary rule, the suit, in such a case, could not have been brought or the money realised. It is, therefore, reasonable that the Crown, in consideration of its giving up its right to those fees, should have for their defrayal, the first claim on the proceeds of the pauper suit".[2]

The rule creates two distinct and separate rights exercisable at the option of the Crown, viz.:—

(1) A right in rem against the property recovered in the suit, and

(2) A right in personam against the party ordered by the decree to pay the Court-fee.

In the event of the Crown not succeeding in realising the amount by pursuing the personal remedy it has a right to recover the same from the subject-matter of the suit.[3] The charge is enforceable in execution by attachment and sale of the properties covered by the charge and not by a separate suit.[4] See R. 13, infra.

The Court-fee payable to the Government is to be calculated as on the date of the presentation of the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. Where the Court-Fees Act was amended after the institution of the suit and before the decree, the calculation of Court-fees has to be made in accordance with the law at the time of the institution.[5]

3. Effect of the first charge.—The effect of the first charge is that, a sale in execution of the same prevails as against a subsequent sale. Thus where a property was sold in 1896 for the Court-fees due to the Government under a decree of 1893 and it was again sold in 1899 in execution of a money decree obtained by a third person in 1894 on a debt anterior to 1893, the former purchase was held to prevail over the latter.[1] Similarly the claim of the Government against any amounts due to the plaintiff under the decree will prevail against any cross claim or claims under cross decrees against the plaintiff in favour of the defendant, provided the defendant has not taken out execution for the balance under O. 21, Rr. 18 or 19. In the case cited below[2] A sued B in forma pauperis to recover a property of the value of Rs. 60,000 and obtained a decree for a sum of Rs. 1,500-0-0. He was ordered to pay a sum of Rs. 1,200-0-0 to the Government as Court-fees. In an application by the Government to recover the amount of the Court-fees from the decree amount of Rs. 1.500-0-0 due from B to A, B contended that a sum of Rs. 1,000-0-0 was due to him from A as costs of the suit and that a sum of Rs. 800-0-0 was also due from him under another cross decree against him making a total sum of Rs. 1,800 and B claimed to be entitled to set-off against this total sum the above amount of Rs 1,500-0-0 due to A. It was held that under the circumstances the Government was entitled to recover the amount of Court-fee from the decretal amount of A in the hands of B in preference to the cross claims of B. It would be otherwise if in the above case B had, before the application by the Government was made, actually applied to execute his decree against A for the balance after making the set-off.[3]

4. Crown entitled to precedence in respect of Court-fees.—It is a principle recognised by the laws of all countries that claims of the state are entitled to precedence over other claims.[1] The amount of Court-fees due to the Crown is therefore entitled to precedence over the claims of other creditors of a pauper decree-holder. This rule is only an enabling one, indicating the manner in which the Crown may realise the debt; it does not preclude the Crown or its representatives from urging its prerogative rights of precedence in any other manner.[2] So when a successful pauper plaintiff attached and sold, for costs due to her, certain property other than the property in suit, belonging to the judgment-debtor and the sale proceeds were paid into Court, and both the plaintiff and the Government solicitor applied for payment out of the said sum, it was held that the Government solicitor was entitled to be paid out in preference to the plaintiff, and that it was not obligatory on the Government to attach the fund in Court before getting payment.[3]

But though in respect of the Court-fees the Government is entitled to precedence among ordinary creditors, it cannot claim precedence over lien holders. "It is only when claims of the Crown and claims of common persons come into competition that the Crown is preferred. It is a matter of common justice and common honesty that the Crown has no more right than a common person to seize A's property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from B."[4] Accordingly it was held that the Government could not attach and sell a defendant's property for Court-fees so as to destroy the rights of a previous mortgagee of the defendant.[5]

5. Recovery of Court-fees by Government from party ordered to pay the same.—The party ordered by the Court under this rule to pay the amount of Court-fee due to the Government is the person who is liable to pay the same to the Government. The Government can proceed against that person personally or against his properties as the case may be.[1]

6 Mode of realisation of Court-fees.—An order under this rule for the recovery of the Court-fees due to the Government is equivalent to a decree in its favour[1] and may be executed by the Government, at its option, either by enforcing the charge on the subject-matter of the suit, or by proceeding in execution against the person or property of the party ordered to pay the Court-fee.[2] No separate suit lies for the recovery of the same.[3] See R. 13 below. The fact that the property, the subject-matter of the suit, has ceased to be in the possession of the party, directed to pay the costs and has come into the possession of the successful party does not affect the right of the Government to enforce the charge.[4] When a decree is attached in execution of another decree, the proper course, in realising the fruits of the latter decree is not to sell the former decree attached as aforesaid, but to execute the attached decree itself at the instance of the attaching decree-holder or otherwise, as provided in O. 21, R. 53. This principle applies to the Government as well, and the fact of the Government possessing a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit under this rule will not entitle the Government to sell the decree passed in favour of the pauper plaintiff.[5] The proper method of recovering Court-fee from a pauper plaintiff who has obtained a decree for future maintenance, is by the appointment of a receiver to collect the maintenance amount and pay the Government the Court-fee due by the plaintiff.[6]

In proper cases, the decree-holder may be allowed to take out execution against the judgment-debtor for the Court-fee due to Government also, in case he has already paid the fee to the Government, or on the Court taking sufficient precaution to have the Court-fee amount paid over to the Government.[7]

A sale for Court-fee wrongly believed to be due[8] or of the property of a third person in execution of an order for the Court-fee due to the Government[9] is a nullity.

An application by the Government for recovery of the amount of the Court-fee is subject to the Law of Limitation and must be made within 3 years from the date of the decree.[10]

7. Appeal.—There was a difference of opinion under the old Code as to whether the Government, in proceedings under the Chapter corresponding to this order was a party to the suit within the meaning of S. 47.[1] R. 13 now provides that the Government in such cases is a party within S. 47. An order on application by the Government for payment of the Court-fee under this order, will therefore now be an order under S. 47 and as such will be appealable as a decree.[2]

Procedure where pauper fails.

R. 11. [S. 412] Where the plaintiff fails in the suit or is dispaupered, or where the suit is withdrawn or dismissed,—

(a) because the summons for the defendant to appear and answer has not been served upon him in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, or the Court shall order the plaintiff, or any person added as a co-plaintiff to the suit, to pay the Court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper.

Failure of Court to provide for Court-fees— Remedy. See Note 2.

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The corresponding section in the old Code contained a penal clause to the effect that if it was found that the suit is vexatious or frivolous the pauper plaintiff was liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 100 or imprisonment for a term which may extend to a month or both. The said clause has been omitted in the present rule.

2. The word "withdrawn" has been newly added. See Note 3, below.

2. Scope of the rule.—The provisions of this rule are mandatory and the Court when it passes a decree in the suit must provide in that decree for payment by the plaintiff of the Court-fee due to the Government.[1] As to the remedy of the Government in case the Court omits to make an order as to Court-fee, see Rr. 12 and 13 below and the notes thereto.

3. Where the suit is withdrawn or dismissed.—The old Code did not contain the words "when the suit is withdrawn" and there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the words "if the plaintiff fails in the suit" included also cases where the suit was withdrawn.[1] The introduction of the words "where the suit is withdrawn" has now set the conflict at rest.

O.33, R.11, Notes 3—6.

It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay[2] and Madras[3] that even where a suit is dismissed on grounds other than those specified in Cls. (a) and (b) of this rule, the plaintiff must be deemed to have failed in the suit and that the Court is bound to make an order for the payment of the Court-fees by him to the Government.

Where a plaint in forma pauperis is returned for presentation to the proper Court the plaintiff cannot be said to have failed in the suit and, therefore, no order for payment of Court-fee can be made under this rule.[4] Similarly where an application to sue as a pauper is rejected because the applicant is a minor and unrepresented, and no enquiry is made as to pauperism, an order under this rule for payment of the Court-fees from the estate of the minor applicant is not legal.[5]

4. Costs.—It is already seen in S. 35 ante[1] that a Court can under certain circumstances order a next friend or a guardian of a minor to pay the costs of the suit personally though he is not a party to the suit. Can this Court in a pauper suit order the next friend or the guardian to pay the Court-fees due to Government? It has been held that it can do so under the combined operation of S. 35 and this rule. Though the Court-fee may not be costs but only revenue so far as the Government is concerned, it is costs incurred by the party paying it, and S. 35 is wide enough to cover such a case.[2]

5. Costs of successful defendant.—This rule makes a provision for the payment of Court-fees due to the Government and does not deal with the power of the Court to order costs of a defendant who has succeeded in a suit in forma pauperis. But it does not follow that in the case of a pauper suit, the Court cannot order the plaintiff to pay the costs of the successful defendant. Orders as to costs as between the parties to the suit are governed by S. 35 as much in suits by paupers as in other suits.[1]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule. 2. Appeal.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule is new and entitles the Government to apply to the Court at any time to make an order under R. 10 or R. 11.[1] In the undermentioned case[2] it was held that the present rule being a rule of procedure had a retrospective effect and applied to cases of dismissal of suits before the new Code came into force.

2. Appeal.—An order passed on an application by the Government under this rule for payment of Court-fee is an order under S. 47 and is therefore appealable.[1] See Note 7 to R. 10, ante.

Synopsis.

1. Scope and object of the rule.

1. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule is new. It sets at rest the conflicting rulings of the several High Courts under the old Code as to whether the Government is to be deemed a party to the pauper application and suit. (See Note 7 to R. 10.). Questions arising under Rr. 10 to 12 between the Government and any of the parties are now questions to be determined under S. 47 and therefore this rule operates as a bar to the institution of an independent suit whether by the Crown or any other party with reference to such matters.[1]

R. 14. [New.] Where an order is made under rule 10, rule 11 or rule 12, the Court shall forthwith cause a copy of the decree to be forwarded to the Collector.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

1 Scope of the rule.—All that the Court should do under this rule is to send to the Collector a copy of the decree which it has passed and which contains an order that the plaintiff shall pay a certain sum to Government. What the Collector does after the receipt of the copy is no concern of the Court and the Court cannot forward the decree to him with a direction to collect the sum payable by plaintiff.[1]

Refusal to allow applicant to sue as pauper to bar subsequent application of like nature.

R. 15. [S. 413.] An order refusing to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue; but the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs (if any) incurred by the Government and by the opposite party in opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper.

[1877—S. 413; 1859—S. 310.]

2. Bar to subsequent application.
3. Dismissal of an application for default.
4. "Right to sue."
5. Costs incurred.

Pauper appeal. See Note 1, Pt. (4).

1 Scope of the rule.—The rule provides that an order refusing an application to sue in forma pauperis shall operate as a bar to a similar subsequent application. It does not, however, bar a subsequent suit provided the costs of the Government and of the opposite party are paid.[1] Nor does the refusal of the pauper application bar an application for a review of that order.[2] As to whether the Court can, after the refusal of the application, allow the pauper applicant to pay the requisite Court-fee within a time to be fixed by it and validate the plaint, see Note 10 to S. 149, and the case cited below.[3]

The provisions of this rule apply also to applications for leave to appeal as a pauper.[4]

2. Bar to subsequent application.—The rule specifically provides that an order "refusing" the pauper application will operate as a bar to a subsequent application of the like nature in respect of the same right to sue. R. 7, ante, empowers the Court under the circumstances mentioned therein, either to allow or refuse to allow an application to sue as a pauper. There is a conflict of opinion as to whether an order of rejection of an application under R. 5 of this Order is an order of "refusal" within the meaning of this rule. In Atul Chandra Sen v. Peary Mohun,[1] it was observed by the

O.33, R.15, Notes 2—4.

High Court of Calcutta that there is no distinction between an order of rejection under R. 5 and an order of refusal under R. 7 and both kinds of orders alike bar a subsequent application under this rule.

The order in that case was, however, one passed after evidence and, therefore, presumably one passed under R. 7.[2] The High Courts of Allahabad,[3] Bombay,[4] Lahore,[5] Madras[6] and Rangoon[7] have, on the other hand, held that the bar under this rule does not extend to an order of rejection passed under R. 5. It is submitted that the latter view is correct.

An order returning the application for presentation to the proper Court does not amount to an order of refusal within the meaning of this rule.[8]

The bar under this rule being one which affects the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain a fresh application, the Court is bound to take notice of it although it is raised at a late stage in subsequent proceedings.[9]

3. Dismissal of an application for default.—According to the High Court of Calcutta[1] a dismissal of an application for default of appearance operates as a bar to the entertainment of a fresh application under this rule. But according to the other High Courts[2] such a dismissal does not amount to an order of refusal within the meaning of this rule and a second application is not barred.

In Ranchod Marar v. Bezanji,[3] it was held by the High Court of Bombay that an order rejecting the application as the applicant did not wish to proceed with the same amounted to an order of refusal within the meaning of the corresponding S. 409 of the old Code and barred a second application. This view was followed in the undermentioned cases by the High Courts of Calcutta[4] and Lahore.[5] The High Court of Rangoon[6] has, however, taken a contrary view.

4. "Right to sue."—The words "right to sue" and "cause of action" are intended to cover the same ground, consequently if the cause of action for a second application to sue as a pauper is different or arose subsequent to that in the prior application, the bar under this rule cannot apply. Thus where A sued in forma pauperis for maintenance against her husband, and her application to sue as a pauper was dismissed as disclosing no cause of action, it was held that a second application to sue as a pauper for the maintenance which fell due subsequent to the dismissal of the prior application, was not barred.[1]

Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoveable Property.

O. 34, R. 1.

Parties to suits for foreclosure, sale and redemption.

R. 1. [New; Act IV of 1882, S. 85.] Subject to the provisions of this Code,[4] all persons having an interest either in the mortgage-security or in the right of redemption[5] shall[19] be joined as parties to any suit[6] relating to the mortgage.

Explanation.—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee[10] a party to the suit; and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage.

1. Suits relating to mortgages.—This order is new. It incorporates, with certain alterations, Ss. 85-90, 92-94, 96, 97 and 99 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 which dealt with the procedure governing suits relating to mortgages. The chief objects with which this Order was enacted were:—

(1) To set at rest the conflict of decisions under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 as to whether an application for an order absolute after a preliminary decree for sale was an application in execution or was one in the suit itself for a further decree. (It is now made clear that the application is for a further decree.)

(2) To put an end to the conflict of decisions as to the applicability of Art. 178 (now Art. 181) of the Limitation Act, to applications for orders absolute, in mortgage suits.[1] (It is now established that Art. 181 applies to an application for a final decree.)

(3) Under the Transfer of Property Act there was no provision for the passing of a final decree where payment was made in accordance with the preliminary decree. This omission has been rectified in this Order.

In suits relating to mortgages, Courts should be guided by the provisions of O. 34 and not by the English practice.[2] The High Court on its original side is also governed by these provisions.[3]

This order applies not only to mortgages of immoveable property but also to mortgages of chattels[4] and to charges[5] see R. 15 below.

2. Transfer of Property Act, S. 85.—This rule corresponds to S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act with the following material alterations:—

(1) The words "all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption" have been substituted for the words "All persons having an interest in the property comprised in a mortgage."

(2) The words "provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest" which occurred at the end of S. 85 have been omitted.

(3) An "explanation" has been added.

The omission of the proviso to S. 85 in the present rule shows that a person may be a necessary party to a mortgage suit though the plaintiff may not be aware of that person's interest in the mortgaged property.[1] Cases under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act bearing on the question of notice are only of academic interest now.[2]

The other effects of the changes introduced by the rule have been discussed in their proper places in the commentary on this rule.

3. Scope and object of the rule.—The object of the present rule as to joinder of parties in mortgage suits is to avoid multiplicity of suits.[1] The rule applies only to suits relating to mortgages (i.e., suits for sale, foreclosure or redemption) and to suits to enforce charges but not to suits for ejectment.[2] The rule does not prohibit the joining of any party but merely lays down that all persons interested in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption should be made parties.[3]

4. "Subject to the provisions of this Code".—This expression has been substituted for the words "Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, S. 437" (Now O. 31, R. 1) which occurred in the Transfer of Property Act, S. 85. Hence the present rule is subject not only to O. 31, R. 1 but also to other provisions of the Code, as, for instance, O. 1, R. 9[1] or O. 30. (Suits by or against firms.)[2]

5. "Persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption".—Under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act the plaintiff in a suit relating to a mortgage was bound to implead all persons having an interest in the "Property comprised in the mortgage". This gave rise to a conflict of decisions. According to one view the words "Property comprised in the mortgage" referred to the interest, as distinguished from the physical property which the mortgagor was competent to transfer by way of mortgage at the date of the transaction.[1] In other words, no person, according to this view, who had no interest either in the *mortgage security or in the right of redemption could be made a party. The High Court of Allahabad, on the other hand, held that the word "property" meant the physical property mortgaged and that it was therefore necessary to implead all persons claiming interest in the property though they had no interest in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption.[2] The present rule has adopted the former view and the Allahabad view is now no longer law.

All the High Courts were, however, agreed, even in cases coming under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, that a person claiming adversely to the mortgagor and the mortgagee, i.e., a person claiming a paramount title was not a necessary or a proper party to a suit relating to a mortgage.[3] The same principle has been held to apply under the present rule also.[4] Thus a person impleaded as the legal representative of a deceased mortgagor cannot have a paramount title to the property which he sets up adversely to the mortgagor, determined in the suit.[5] A person who, in a redemption suit, claims the right of redemption in opposition to the plaintiff cannot be said to be claiming a title paramount to that of the mortgagor and the mortgagee and may be a proper party to the suit.[6] The High Court of Madras seems to draw a distinction between a suit for redemption and a suit for the enforcement of a mortgage and is inclined to hold that persons claiming the property adversely to the mortgagor and mortgagee can be joined as parties to a suit for redemption.[7] But the judgments in these cases do not show why the general rule as to the exclusion of questions relating to paramount or adverse title from mortgage suits should not apply to suits for redemption. On the other hand, it has been held by the Patna High Court[8] that even in suits for redemption persons asserting a paramount title to the mortgaged property should not be joined as parties. Where a person asserting a paramount title to the property has been erroneously made a party to a suit relating to a mortgage, he should be discharged from the suit.[9] But an objection on the ground of the joinder of such a person is not one affecting jurisdiction but is only an irregularity in the matter of the joinder of parties and can be cured under S. 99 of the Code.[10] Where, therefore, a party allows the suit to go on and the Court adjudicates on his claim to paramount title he will be bound by the decision and cannot subsequently contend that the question was not within the purview of the suit.[11]

O. 34, R.1, Note 5.

Moreover, the rule as to the exclusion of paramount title is not an inflexible one and, in proper cases, persons asserting a paramount title to the property can be conveniently made parties to a mortgage suit and their claims can be adjudicated upon in such suit.[12] Thus, where the person claiming paramount or adverse title is in possession of the mortgaged property and is likely to resist the claim of the plaintiff if the latter succeeds in the suit, it may be convenient to join him as a party so as to avoid a multiplicity of suits.[13] Similarly, where it is alleged that the person claiming paramount title is only a benamidar for the mortgagor, he can be joined as a party to the suit and the question can be decided therein.[14] So also in the case of a mortgage of joint family property by the manager of joint Hindu family the other members of the family, who are joined as defendants to a suit on the mortgage, can question the validity of the mortgage.[15]

Where a person is dismissed from a suit on a mortgage on the ground of his claiming a paramount title to the property, he cannot subsequently sue for redemption.[16]

The question whether a person other than one claiming a paramount title, may be made a party to a suit relating to a mortgage and whether the questions raised by him can be gone into in such suit will depend upon the applicability of the provisions of O. 1 and 2 thereto. As has been seen in Note 30 to O. 1, R. 10, ante, questions raised purely as between the plaintiffs or between the defendants inter se and in which the opposite side is not concerned, are not "questions involved in the suit" and need not be gone into in the suit. Thus in a suit on a mortgage in favour of a deceased person a person claiming the estate of the deceased mortgagee in opposition to the plaintiff is not a necessary party to the suit.[17] Similarly where the plaintiff mortgagee dies and some of his legal representatives are brought on the record a person who claims also to be another legal representative cannot be added as a party on that ground only and allowed to raise questions purely between himself and the rival claimants inter se.[18] It has also been held similarly that a question of the relative liability of each of several co-mortgagors cannot be gone into in a mortgage suit.[19]

6. Parties to a suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption.—As has been seen in Note 5, ante, all persons having an interest in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption should be made parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. The interest should be one subsisting at the time of the suit.[1] Thus the owner of a contingent interest like that of a Hindu reversioner is not a necessary party to the suit.[2] Similarly a transferee pending a suit on the mortgage is not a necessary party to the suit.[3]

The following are necessary parties as being interested in the mortgage security:—

(1) The heirs and assignees of the mortgagee's interest.

(2) Co-mortgagees.[4]

The following are necessary parties as being interested in the equity of redemption:—

creditor as one of the persons entitled to redeem a mortgage and he is therefore no longer a necessary party to a mortgage suit.

The following are not necessary parties to a suit relating to a mortgage:—

(a) A prior mortgagee. See the explanation.

(b) A person merely in possession of the mortgaged property.[12]

(c) A person whose name is merely entered in the village papers as having some title to the plots in question; but who is in no way connected with the mortgage.[13]

(d) A person who has a right to be maintained out of the income of the mortgaged property when such right is not made a charge on the property.[14]

(e) A person having merely an inchoate title to the property.[15]

(f) A receiver appointed in a partition suit previous to the mortgage suit.[16]

(g) Where one of two co-owners of a property mortgages his undivided share and a suit is brought in relation to such mortgage, the other co-owner is not a necessary party thereto.[17]

(h) Where a number of persons own the equity of redemption in distinct shares and the mortgagee, in his suit on the mortgage, exempts one or more of such shares, and claims only a decree for a proportionate part of the mortgage debt, the owners of the exempted shares are not necessary parties.[18] The same rule applies where the mortgagee has released from the mortgage any portions of the property.[19]

(i) Where a mortgagee has, through negligence, allowed strangers to trespass upon, and acquire, parts of the mortgaged property, such persons are not necessary parties to a suit for redemption.[20] The general rule is that a mortgage is indivisible and hence suits cannot be brought for the redemption or enforcement of a mortgage, part by part.[20-a]

As to the parties to suits, other than suits for redemption, foreclosure or sale, by or against mortgagors or mortgagees, see the undermentioned cases.[21]

7. Trustees, executors or administrators.—The rule is made "subject to the other provisions of the Code." This would include O. 31, R. 1 under which the trustee, executor or administrator in whom the property is vested can effectively represent the persons beneficially interested. The latter need not therefore be joined as parties to a suit relating to the mortgage.[1]

But the Court has a discretion to join the beneficiaries in a proper case,[2] as for example when, in the case of an executor, the estate has been fully administered,[3] or in the case of a trustee or an executor, his interest is adverse to that of the beneficiaries.[4] In the case of joint-trustees, however, all of them should be impleaded in any suit relating to the mortgage.[5]

8. Benamidar.—It is now well settled that a benamidar can sue or be sued in his own name and that the rule applies to mortgage suits also.[1] The real owner is not a necessary party to such a suit. The contrary view, held in the undermentioned cases,[2] is not good law. There is, however, no impropriety in adding the real owner as a party in proper cases.[3]

9. Sub-mortgagee.—Where a mortgagee creates a mortgage of his rights in favour of another he is said to create a sub-mortgage. The sub-mortgagee is entitled to bring to sale the interest of the sub-mortgagor in the mortgage,[1] and the original mortgagor is not a necessary party to such a suit.[2]

Where the mortgagor is also made a party to the suit, the sub-mortgagee may sue for sale or foreclosure of the mortgaged property itself in cases and in the circumstances which would have entitled the sub-mortgagor on the date of the sub-mortgage to claim that relief, for the purpose of working out his rights against the sub-mortgagor.[3] The mortgagor is not a necessary party to a suit for redemption by the sub-mortgagor against his sub-mortgagee,[4] though there is no impropriety in making him a party thereto.[5] In a suit for redemption by the mortgagor against his mortgagee, the sub-mortgagee, as being interested in the mortgage security, (is a necessary party).[6] But where the mortgagor, not having notice of the sub-mortgage, fails to implead him in such suit and pays off the mortgage amount to the mortgagee, the sub-mortgagee cannot, after that redemption, bring the right mortgaged to him to sale.[7] The reason is that he has only a terminable interest in the mortgage-right of his sub-mortgagor and when that right has been legally terminated, his security so far is gone.

10. Prior mortgagees—Explanation.—Under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act it was held in some cases that a prior mortgagee was a necessary party to a suit to enforce or redeem a puisne mortgage.[1] These cases have been superseded by the explanation to the present rule under which a prior mortgagee or his transferee is not a necessary party to a suit relating to a pusine mortgage.[2] But there is no prohibition against joining a prior mortgagee in such a suit,[3] and the equities of a particular case may even demand that he should be so made a party.[4]

Where a decree for sale is passed on foot of a puisne mortgage, without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit, the rights of the prior mortgagee are in no way affected and the sale under the decree can only be subject to the prior mortgage.[5] Even if the prior mortgagee is made a party to the pusine mortgagee's suit he is not bound to assert his prior right, if no relief is claimed against him and the priority of his right is not in any way impugned and the decree in the suit cannot affect his rights.[6] But where he is impleaded and his prior right impugned or sought to be postponed in any way, he is bound to assert his right under the prior mortgage. Otherwise his right will be barred by constructive res judicata.[7] When a prior mortgagee who has also purchased the equity of redemption and is in possession of the mortgaged property is made a defendant to a suit upon the puisne mortgage the decree may direct the puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior mortgage before bringing the property to sale.[8] his prior mortgage inasmuch as the prior mortgage is not impugned.[9] But he is not precluded from setting up the prior mortgage and if he so sets it up it should be adjudicated upon by the Court.[9-a] Where A's claim to the priority rests not on a prior mortgage in his favour but on the fact of his being subrogated to the rights of a prior mortgagee by payment, he must assert the right to such priority on pain of being precluded by res judicata from putting it forward in a subsequent suit.[10] The reason is that in such a case he fills only one role, viz., that of puisne mortgagee and must put forward all the defences open to him. Where a person holds two mortgages on the same property, he can, by force of the explanation to the rule, sue on the later mortgage subject to his rights under the earlier mortgage[11] though according to the High Court of Allahabad he must expressly reserve his rights under the prior mortgage.[11-a] The High Court of Bombay has, however, held that he cannot sue on the subsequent mortgage alone unless, perhaps, he reserves his rights on the first mortgage.[11-b] But according to the general trend of decisions he cannot sue on his earlier mortgage only and afterwards sue to enforce the second mortgage.[12] But a contrary view has also been taken in the undermentioned cases[13] which proceed upon the ground that inasmuch as the two mortgages constitute different causes of action, there is nothing to prevent their being sued on separately without regard to the question whether the mortgage sued on is an earlier or a later one.

O. 34, R. 1, Notes 10—11.

It was held by the High Court of Patna in the undermentioned case[14] that a mortgagee can bring the property to sale subject to a prior mortgage in his own favour, at any rate, when he was not able to sue on the first mortgage. But the consensus of opinion seems to be that though the mortgagee may be allowed to sue separately on the mortgages and obtain decrees, he cannot be allowed to bring the property to sale twice or under one of his mortgages subject to the other,[15] the reason being that it would not be equitable to the mortgagor to allow the mortgagee to do so, as a fair price cannot be obtained for the property at such a sale. The conflict has now practically been set at rest, in cases of mortgages coming into existence after the 1st April, 1930 by the enactment of the new S. 67-A of the Transfer of Property Act by which a mortgagee holding two or more mortgages shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be bound to sue on all the mortgages. See also Note 40 to S. 11, ante.

11. Mahomedan co-heirs.—Where a Mahomedan mortgagor or mortgagee dies leaving a number of heirs the ordinary rule is that all the heirs should be made parties to a suit relating to the mortgage.[1] But the failure to join some of the heirs is not fatal to the suit and the decree passed will bind all the heirs.[2] It was so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khairajmal v. Daim.[3] The reason is, as has been already seen in Note 63-B to S. 11 and Note 5 to S. 52, ante, that the representatives actually brought on the record must, in the absence of fraud or collusion, be deemed to be litigating in the common interest of themselves and of all the other heirs within the meaning of Expl. VI of S. 11 of the Code. Where, however, pending the suit objection is raised as to the non-joinder of some of the heirs but the plaintiff refuses to make them parties, the decree can bind only the right title and interest, of the persons actually on the record.[4] In view of the Privy Council decision referred to above, the views expressed in the undermentioned cases,[5] that a decree against only some of the legal representatives of a deceased Mahomedan mortgagor is not binding on the other representatives or that there is some difference in principle between Mahomedan co-heirs and the members of a joint Hindu family in this respect cannot be accepted as correct, especially as those cases do not advert to the Privy Council decision.

O. 34, R.1, Note 12.

12. Joint Hindu family.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether, in a suit by or against the manager of a joint Hindu family to enforce or redeem a mortgage, the other members of the family are necessary parties in the sense that their interests will not be bound if they are not individually joined as parties. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras[1] and Patna[2] and in several cases of the other High Courts[3] that in such a case the manager effectively represents the other members of the family and that the latter cannot impugn the proceedings as not binding on them merely on the ground of their not having been individually made parties to the suit. But in many other decisions,[4] it has been held that the other co-parceners are necessary parties to the suit and that their interests cannot in any way be affected by the result of the suit. In this connection, the following decisions of the Privy Council should be referred to.[5] In Kisham

O. 34, R.1. Note 12.

Prasad v. Har Narain,[6] it was held that the manager of a joint Hindu family business effectively represents the family in all litigation by or against the family in connection with the joint family business. In Sheo Shankar v. Juddoo Kunwar,[7] the Privy Council observed as follows:—"There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions including foreclosure suits, when the managers of joint Hindu families so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound." In Ganpat Lal v. Bindleasin Prasad,[8] a minor co-parcener sued for a declaration that his right to redeem a mortgage was unaffected by a sale under a decree passed against the manager without impleading him (the minor) as a party. Their Lordships rejected that claim holding that, after the purchase under his decree, the mortgagee was in the position of a purchaser and that unless the sale and the decree were attacked in a properly constituted suit his possession could not be disturbed. In Lingan Gouda v. Basan Gauda,[9] the Privy Council held that S. 11, Expl. VI was applicable to a joint Hindu family. In view of the foregoing decisions of the Privy Council, the Madras and Patna view must be accepted as correct. See also Note 61 to S. 11, ante. Even granting that the son is a necessary party to a suit against the father, where he is impleaded as a legal representative of his father he cannot object to the decree in the executing Court, on the ground of the plaintiff's failure to implead him.[9-a] Nor does the plaintiff mortgagee lose his right to sue the son separately by his failure to join him in the suit against the father.[9-b]

On the question whether in a suit by or against the manager of a joint Hindu family the manager should be expressly and specifically stated as suing or as being sued in his representative capacity as manager, there is a conflict of decisions; some cases holding that such express mention is not necessary,[10] and others holding that it is.[11] The better view, it is submitted, is that the question whether a manager sues or is sued in a representative character is a question of fact in each case and his specific description as manager is not essential.

Although it may not be legally necessary to implead the other co-parceners in a suit by or against a manager, yet, they would be proper parties to such a suit.[12] Further, the right of the other co-parceners, to object, not on the ground, of their non-joinder, but on the ground of the debt being not binding on them, or as being tainted with illegality or immorality, is not affected by proceedings to which they have not been parties.[13] But in a suit on a mortgage of joint family property where the manager is not made a party, all the others are necessary parties.[14] Similarly, where the father is impleaded but he does not, or cannot, act in a representative character, the other members should be joined if their interests are sought to be affected.[15]

To a suit to enforce the mortgage of the share of one co-parcener alone, the other co-parceners are not necessary parties.[16] Similarly, where the mortgage is not a joint family transaction but one entered into by a member of the family in his individual capacity, the others are not necessary parties.[17]

Where the parties are not governed by Hindu Law, and the son, under the Customary Law, is entitled only to a reversionary interest for the protection of which he has the right to interfere to prevent unnecessary alienations of the property, the son's interest is not sufficient to entitle him to be made a party to a suit on the mortgage.[18]

13. Assignee of mortgage.—In a suit for redemption of a mortgage against the assignee thereof, the original mortgagee is not a necessary party.[1] But in a suit to enforce the mortgage brought by the assignee of the mortgage, the original mortgagee is a necessary party where the mortgagor denies receipt of consideration.[2]

14. Receiver in insolvency.—Where the mortgagor becomes insolvent after the date of the mortgage, the mortgagee bringing a suit on his mortgage is bound to implead the Official Receiver or Assignee as a party thereto.[1] The undermentioned cases to the contrary[2] are no longer law in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Kala Chand v. Jagannath[3] referred to above. See also O. 22, R. 10, ante.

15. Lessee.—A lessee who has been inducted on the land by the mortgagor or by the mortgagee and whose interest will be affected by the result of the suit is a necessary party to a suit relating to the mortgage.[1] But a person having merely a raiyati interest in the land is not entitled to redeem a mortgage or to be joined as a party to a suit on the mortgage.[2]

16. Landlord.—Although the general rule is that a person claiming a paramount title is not a necessary party to a suit on the mortgage, yet, in some cases it may be convenient to join the landlord of the mortgagor as a party thereto.[1] (See Note 5, supra.) Where the landlord is in possession of the mortgaged property not by virtue of a supreme title but by virtue of a title improperly and collusively obtained from the tenant under a decree for ejectment, he is a necessary party to the suit on the mortgage.[2]

17. Kanomdar.—In an appeal by sub-tenants against a decree for redemption of a Kanom, obtained by a jenmi, the Kanomdar is a necessary party.[1] Where a melcharathdar along with the jenmi obtains a decree for the redemption of a Kanom, and the Kanomdar appeals against the decree, claiming compensation for improvements, the jenmi is a necessary party to the appeal.[2]

18. Parties to appeal.—The provisions of this rule apply also to appeals.[1]

19. Effect of non-joinder.—Under S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, it was held that the word "must" in that section was imperative in character, and that, consequently, the failure to join a person interested in the mortgaged property as a party to the suit was a defect fatal to the suit.[1] But the Court was, however, held to have power under S. 32 of the old Code (now O. 1, R. 10) to add the necessary parties.[2] As has been seen in Note 4, ante, O. 34, R. 1 makes it now clear that its provisions are "subject to the other provisions of the Code" including O. 1, R. 9, and, hence, the non-joinder of any person as a party to the suit is not a fatal defect; a decree can be passed so far as regards the parties actually on the record are concerned,[3]

its application to the complicated facts arising in mortgage suits has been the subject of a great diversity of judicial opinion. In order to appreciate the various views properly, it is necessary to remember the following important principles:—

(1) Where an owner C mortgages his property to A by way of a simple mortgage, the mortgagee gets nothing more than a right to obtain from the Court an order that the property be sold for the recovery of the debt. The mortgagor retains, in himself,

  (a) a right to redeem the mortgage, and

  (b) a right to the physical possession and enjoyment of the mortgaged property.[9]

(2) Where the mortgage is a usufructuary one, A will get a right to be in possession of the property until his debt is discharged, and C will retain only the right to redeem.

(3) Where C, the mortgagor, sells his interest in the property to D, then, if the mortgage is a simple one, D gets C's rights, viz., the right to redeem and the right to possession of the mortgaged property; if the mortgage is a usufructuary one, he will get only the right to redeem the mortgage.[10]

(4) Where C, after creating a mortgage in favour of A, creates a further mortgage in favour of B, then, if the mortgage is a simple one, B will get

  (a) a right to redeem the prior mortgage, and

  (b) a right to obtain from the Court an order that the property be sold subject to the prior mortgage, for the recovery of his debt.

C will retain the right to redeem both the mortgages plus the right to possession.

If B's mortgage is a usufructuary one, he will be entitled to a right to redeem the prior mortgage and a right to the possession of the property; and C will be entitled only to a right to redeem both the mortgages.

(5) Where C makes several mortgages successively in favour of different persons, the later mortgagee is entitled to redeem the earlier one, but the earlier ones cannot redeem the later ones, according to the maxim "Redeem up and foreclose down."[11]

We now proceed to consider the various classes of cases illustrating the application of the above principles:—

(i) C executes a simple mortgage in favour of A and then sells his interests in the mortgaged property to D. A files a suit on his mortgage, against C without impleading D, and, in execution of the decree obtained therein, purchases the property himself. Being obstructed by D in the possession proceedings, A sues D for possession. Is the suit maintainable? No.[12] The reason is that D, not having been made a party in A's suit on the mortgage, is not affected in any way by the decree and execution proceedings in such suit, and his right to possession cannot be disturbed. On the same principle, if D is dispossessed by A in execution, he can, in a suit by him against A, recover back possession unconditionally.[13] There is no difference in principle, in this respect, even if D is a purchaser of C's interest in execution of a money decree against him, instead of in a private transfer.[14] The remedy of A in such cases would be to file a fresh suit on his mortgage against D.[15]

He cannot, however, bring a fresh suit where his claim on the original mortgage is barred by limitation.[16]

It was, however, held in the undermentioned cases[17] that the result of not impleading D or other person entitled to be in possession would be to make the decree so obtained ineffectual only against the right of redemption vested in such persons, so that, A would be entitled to possession against them subject to their right of redemption. It is submitted that this view is not correct. D has not only got a right of redemption but a right to the possession of the property as well. A decree to which he was not a party cannot affect him even in respect of the latter right.

(ii) The principles above stated in Class I will equally apply to cases, where D, instead of being a purchaser of C's interest, is a usufructuary mortgagee in possession.[18]

(iii) C executes simple mortgages first in favour of A and then in favour of B. B sues on his mortgage without impleading A and, in execution of the decree obtained therein, purchases the property in Court auction and enters into possession. Thereafter, A sues on his mortgage without impleading B and purchases the same property in execution of his decree. It will be seen that, at the time of the suit by A the right to redeem and the right to possession of the property being already vested in B, cannot be affected by A's suit to which he was not a party. It follows that A cannot maintain a suit for possession against B[19] or a suit for possession subject to a redemp- tion by B.[20] He can, however, bring a fresh suit for sale on his mortgage against B provided, of course, that, on the date of such suit, the claim on the mortgage is not barred by limitation.[21]

Does the suit lie? No.[22] The reason is that at the time of B's suit on the mortgage the right to redeem and the right to possession having both already vested in A, the latter cannot be affected by anything done in B's suit. B has, however, two remedies open to him, viz., (a) to redeem A[23] and (b) to sue A for sale on the subsequent mortgage subject to the prior mortgage.[24] If B adopts the former remedy and redeem A, the latter, in his turn, as owner of the equity of redemption, can redeem B.[25] Both these rights can, however, be adjusted on equitable grounds in the same suit.[26] If B adopts the latter remedy, A can, in equity, claim that B should redeem the prior mortgage rights vested in him before disturbing his possession.[27] In other words, A can set up his prior mortgage as a shield against the claim of B.[28] This right of A is a weapon of defence and not of attack[29] and can be set up notwithstanding the claim on the mortgage itself is barred by limitation.[30]

(v) C makes a mortgage in favour of A. Thereafter, in execution of a money decree against C the mortgaged property is attached and sold and is purchased by D. Pending the attachment A purchases by private sale the property from C in satisfaction of the mortgage and enters into possession. In a suit by D against A for recovery of possession, can A set up his mortgage as a "shield" as a defence to the suit? No.[31] The reason is that the private purchase of A pending attachment is void against all claims of D arising under the attachment and does not convey the equity of redemption to A. The prior mortgage can be used as a shield only for the purpose of protecting a possession to which the person setting it up has become lawfully entitled, and since in the case above referred to, A had no valid title to such possession as against D, he cannot use his prior mortgage as a shield in D's suit to recover possession.

(vi) C executes simple mortgages first in favour of A and then in favour of B. A sues C on his mortgage without impleading B. B also institutes a parallel suit on his own mortgage without impleading A. A purchases pending B's suit the mortgaged property in execution of his decree, and thereafter B purchases the same property in execution of his decree. If the doctrine of lis pendens applies to the case then A's purchase cannot take effect as against B's and therefore, B will be entitled to possession as against A; A's remedy will then be to file a fresh suit for sale against B.[32] Further on the analogy of the principle stated in Class v above, A not being entitled to possession cannot hold up his prior mortgage as a shield against B's suit for possession. The undermentioned cases, however, while holding that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to such cases, have nevertheless come to the conclusion that A can get a decree for possession subject to redemption by B.[33] The High Court of Allahabad has, in a recent Full Bench case,[34] held that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to such cases but has in a somewhat contrary manner come to conclusions which can only follow on the basis that the doctrine does not apply. Thus it has formulated the following conclusions:—

If A sues B as plaintiff for possession, then

(1) if he was the earlier purchaser, (i.e., purchaser pending B's suit) in point of time he can redeem B and recover possession even though his (A's) mortgage is barred by time,

(2) if he is the later purchaser (i.e., if B's purchase is pending A's suit) then his suit even for redemption cannot be decreed.

If B sues A as plaintiff for possession, then,

(1) If B is the earlier purchaser in point of time he must redeem A and A cannot compel B to submit to redemption by him.

(2) If B is the later purchaser in point of time he must first redeem A but A will have the right to redeem B next and retain possession.

The High Courts of Madras[35] and Calcutta[36] have held that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to legal proceedings to enforce mortgages and that therefore a sale in pursuance of a mortgage decree, the mortgage having been executed before the institution of the suit, is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. According to this view the first purchaser will be entitled to possession as against the later purchaser, a result, which is practically the same as that of the Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court referred to above.

Note 19.

In the principles discussed in the several classes of cases discussed above there is no distinction between the case of a mortgagee-purchaser and a stranger-purchaser, as can be seen from an examination of the cases above referred to.[37] When the puisne mortgagee, who has not been impleaded in a suit on the prior mortgage, seeks to redeem a prior mortgage, it was held before the Transfer of Property Act was passed that he should pay the amount due under the prior mortgage without any reference to the decree that was passed in the prior mortgage.[38] But S. 89 of the said Act provided that when once a final decree was passed on a mortgage, the mortgage security and the right to redeem were both extinguished, with the result, that, thereafter, the rights of the parties fell to be determined on the basis of the decree.[39] Even subsequent to the Transfer of Property Act the earlier view is adopted in many cases.[40] In O. 34, R. 5 which has taken the place of S. 89 of that Act the words as to the mortgage security being extinguished have been omitted. The result now is the same as was held by the decisions prior to the Transfer of Property Act, namely, that the puisne mortgagee, seeking to redeem the prior mortgagee should pay the amount due under the prior mortgage and not merely the amount due under the decree thereon.[41] He is not, however, bound to pay for any improvements made by the purchaser.[42] Where a puisne mortgagee is impleaded in a suit to enforce a prior mortgage, and a decree for sale or foreclosure is passed on the mortgage, the effect is to extinguish his security if he does not exercise his right of redemption or his security is not expressly saved.[43] It was held in the undermentioned cases[44] that the puisne mortgagee is not entitled, in such a case, to insist that the mortgagor should redeem his mortgage also, his cause of action being altogether different from that of the prior mortgagee. Similarly it was held if the puisne mortgagee pays off the prior mortgage, he cannot apply for an order absolute for the amounts of both the mortgages.[45] But the said cases are of doubtful authority now, since express provision is made in Rr. 2 and 4 for the adjudication of the rights of subsequent mortgagees who are joined as parties to a suit on the prior mortgage. See also forms Nos. 9, 10 and 11 of App. D. These legislative changes only give effect to an old practice as can be seen from the below mentioned case.[46] See also the undermentioned cases.[47]

20. A person cannot be both a plaintiff and a defendant.—Suppose A and B are the first mortgagees and A and C are the puisne mortgagees of a property. In a suit by A and B for foreclosure of their mortgage, C alone can be joined as defendant as a puisne mortgagee, because A cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in the same suit.[1] The same person cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in a suit even in different capacities.[2]

21. Joinder of parties.—A misjoinder of plaintiffs in a mortgage suit, some of whom are not entitled to any relief, is a mere defect of form and is not fatal to the suit.[1] This rule does not prohibit the joinder of any person[2] whom it is proper to add under the provisions of O. 1, Rr. 1 and 3.

Where, after the commencement of the trial of a suit, an application is made to the Court for adding persons alleged to be interested in the subject matter of the suit, the matter is in the discretion of the Court; it may, in a proper case, decline under O. 1, R. 10 to add the parties sought to be impleaded.[3] As to the effect of joining new parties after the period of limitation, see Limitation Act S. 22 and the undermentioned cases.[4]

1. Legislative changes :—

The rule has been extensively amended by the Transfer of Property Amended Act, (XXI of 1929). The old rule ran as follows:—

"2. In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for the costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him on the day next hereinafter referred to, or

(b) declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and directing—

(c) that if the defendant pays into Court the amount so due on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall also, if necessary, put the defendant in possession of the property, but,

(d) that if such payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property."

O. 34, R.2, Notes 1—3.

The following important changes may be noted:—

(1) The present rule makes it clear that the decree under it is a preliminary decree.[1]

(2) Under the old rule it was not clear, when accounts were directed to be taken, whether they were to be taken up to the date of declaring in Court the amount due, or up to the date fixed for payment. It is now provided that the accounts are to be taken up to the date of the preliminary decree.

(3) The provision as to other costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by the mortgagee in respect of the mortgage security, is new.

(4) The new rule makes it clear as to when the period fixed for payment commences to run.

(5) The provision in (c) (i) relating to subsequent costs and subsequent interest is new.

(6) The same sub-rule makes it clear that the retransfer is to be at the mortgagor's cost.

(7) Under the same sub-rule the mortgagee has to apply for a final decree on default by the mortgagor.

(8) The provision as to the Court's power to extend time which was contained in the proviso to sub-R. (2) in the old R. 3 has been enacted as sub-R. (2) of this rule.

(9) Sub-R. (3) makes express provision for the form of decree in cases where subsequent mortgagees are made parties.

2. Analogous law.—T. P. Act, S. 86.—This rule corresponds to S. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, with the following differences:—

(1) Under R. 2 payment has to be made in all cases into the Court while under S. 86 payment could be made to the plaintiff or into the Court.

(2) The words "if so required" have been added into sub-R. (1) (c) (i) as it was found that, in the moffusil Courts it was not the practice for the mortgagee to execute a re-conveyance of the property to the mortgagor.

3. Scope and object of the rule.—The scheme and object of this order is "that a general account should be taken once for all, and an aggregate amount be stated in the decree for principal interest and costs due on a fixed day and that after the expiration of that day, if the property be not redeemed, the matter shall pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment and the rights of the mortgagee should thenceforth depend not on the contents of the bond but on the directions in the decree".[1]

The object of the rule is to prevent mortgagees from realising their securities otherwise than in the mode prescribed by the rule.[2]

(2) Chundra Nath v. Burroda Shoondury, (1895) 22 Cal 813 (816).

4. Persons entitled to the right to foreclosure.—Under S. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, as it existed before it was amended by Act XX of 1929, the remedy by way of foreclosure was available only in the case of

(1) a mortgagee by conditional sale,
(2) an English mortgage, and
(3) an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds in Bombay.[1]

The newly amended S. 67 now provides that no mortgagee "other than a mortgagee by conditional sale or a mortgagee under an anomalous mortgage by the terms of which he is entitled to foreclose," can institute a suit for foreclosure.[2] It follows that neither a mortgagee under an English mortgage, nor an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds in Bombay can sue for foreclosure. Their remedy is only to sue for sale. By S. 15 of the Amending Act XX of 1929, however, the remedy of the equitable mortgagee in Bombay to proceed by way of foreclosure was kept open till 1st April, 1932.

The characteristic of a foreclosure decree is that it completely extinguishes the mortgagor's right to redeem and thereafter makes the mortgagee owner of the property. A mortgagee who has obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure is entitled to apply for setting aside an execution sale under O. 21, R. 90 on the ground of material irregularity.[3]

5. Form of preliminary decree.—See appendix D, forms 3, 3-A, 9 and 10.

In a preliminary decree for foreclosure, the Court cannot, except with the consent of parties, direct payment of the mortgage money by instalments.[1] But where a preliminary decree allowing payment by instalments is passed by consent of parties, it does not necessarily fall outside the scope of R. 2; the provisions of Rr. 2 and 3 may still apply to such a decree.[2] A preliminary decree for foreclosure which does not conform to the form prescribed by this rule is irregular, but after it is made absolute, the defendant cannot object to delivery of possession under the decree, to the decree-holder.[3]

6. "Ordering that an account be taken".—The amount (whether accounts are directed to be taken or not) is to be calculated up to the date of the preliminary decree. The object of the rule is that a general account should be taken of all amounts due between the parties once for all and that the aggregate amount should be declared as due to the plaintiff on payment of which the property is to be redeemed.[1] The accounts have to be taken before the final decree; they cannot be directed to be taken in execution of the final decree.[2] In the taking of such accounts, not only sums due by the mortgagor but also those due by the mortgagee should be taken into consideration.[3] If the decree is silent as to the person selected to take the accounts, the parties may themselves select a person to do so and his award will be binding on them.[4] The accounting is, however, to be restricted to the mortgage transaction in question in the suit and should not be extended to other transactions between the parties.[5] For other cases on this part of the subject, see the undermentioned cases.[6]

7. Principal.—The onus of proving the amount due to him is initially on the mortgagee. Hence if the mortgage deed is not properly stamped and the mortgagee refuses to pay the stamp duty and penalty with the result the mortgage deed is inadmissible in evidence, the mortgagee cannot recover anything beyond what the mortgagor admits to be due.[1]

The statement in the mortgage deed is prima facie proof of the amount due.[2] But the mortgagor can plead a total or partial discharge of the debt or that the recital as to consideration in the bond is wholly or partially untrue.[3] But in such a case, the burden will be upon him to substantiate his allegations. It is not for the mortgagee to prove that the consideration stated in the bond was actually paid by him.[4] But recitals in deeds are not evidence against third parties.[5]

Where only part of the alleged consideration is proved to have been paid, the mortgage is valid to the extent of the part so paid.[6] Similarly, in the case of a mortgage of property belonging to a Hindu joint family, where it is proved that only a part of the consideration was supported by legal necessity, the mortgage is valid and binding to that extent.[7]

8. Interest.—By Act XXI of 1929 a new rule (R. 11) has been enacted which deals specially with the power of the Court to order payment of interest in mortgage suits. The reader is referred to the notes under that rule for full information on the subject. According to S. 58 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, "mortgage money" includes interest on the principal secured by the mortgage. This principle is recognised by the present rule which inter alia makes the payment of the interest provided in the mortgage deed a condition of redemption. In the absence of anything to the contrary in the mortgage deed,[1] interest as well as the principal constitute a charge on the property.[2]

9. Interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment.—Before the amendment of the rule by Act XXI of 1929 there was no provision either in R. 2 or R. 3 for the payment of interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment. Hence, there was a lack of uniformity in the decision on the question.[1] Express provision has now been made for the inclusion, in the preliminary decree for foreclosure, of a direction for the payment of "subsequent interest" up to the date of actual payment. For fuller information on the subject, see Notes under R. 11 below.

10. Rule of damdupat.—See Note 16 to S. 34.

11. Costs of the suit.—The general rule in all suits relating to mortgages is that the mortgagee is entitled to his costs. But it is within the power of the Court, in view of the mortgagee's conduct and the peculiar circumstances of any case, to refuse to award him any costs.[1] Ordinarily costs awarded against a mortgagor are part of the mortgage money, and are recoverable from out of the mortgaged property.[2] But the Court can, in the exercise of its discretion, under S. 35, make such costs recoverable from the mortgagor personally.[3]

A puisne mortgagee who is made a party to a suit on the mortgage is also entitled to his costs against the mortgagor.[4] Similarly a co-mortgagee is also entitled to his costs even though he refused to join the plaintiff in a suit on a mortgage and was therefore joined as a defendant in the suit.[5] It has been held that costs are to be awarded to the mortgagee on the scale of costs as between attorney and client.[6] The mortgagee is also entitled to his costs incurred subsequent to the preliminary decree up to the date of payment. (See R. 10 below.)

12. Other costs, charges and expenses.—The rule as amended by Act XXI of 1929 makes express provision for payment to the mortgagee of all expenses properly incurred by him in respect of the mortgage security, together with interest thereon. Even prior to Act XXI of 1929 the mortgagee was entitled in a suit on the mortgage, to claim as part of the mortgage money expenses properly incurred by him for the preservation of the mortgaged property, the protection of his title to the property, etc.[1] (See Transfer of Property Act, Ss. 72 and 63-A.) R. 10 below also provides for the payment of such expenses incurred subsequent to the preliminary decree up to date of payment.

13. Account against mortgagee in possession.—Under S. 77 of the Transfer of Property Act, a mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property is not liable to account for the rents and profits of the property where, under the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee is to take the rents and profits in lieu of interest or in lieu of interest and defined portions of the principal. In other cases, a mortgagee in possession is liable to account for the rents and profits of the property. Under S. 76 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act, he must keep, clear, full and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee,[1] and is bound to deduct the rents and profits realised by him from the amount claimed by him against the mortgagor.[2] Further he is liable to pay a reasonable occupation rent if he is personally in possession of the land.[3] He must also, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, pay the Government revenue and all charges of a public nature and all rents accruing due in respect of the property, and, if owing to his default, the mortgagor has to pay any of these items of expenditure, he is entitled to a set-off in respect thereof.[4] [See Transfer of Property Act, S. 76 (c).]

14. Accounts in suits by or against sub-mortgagee.—A sub-mortgagee is entitled to sue for sale or foreclosure to the same extent as the original mortgagee himself.[1] Where a sub-mortgagee is a party to a suit on the mortgage, the proper course is to direct accounts to be taken, both of the amounts due to the original mortgagee and of the amounts due to the sub-mortgagee and to order that, out of the sum due to the original mortgagee, the sub-mortgagee should be paid the amount due to him on his mortgage, that the balance should be paid to the original mortgagee and that, thereafter, both the mortgagees should re-convey to the mortgagor the mortgaged property.[2] (See also Appendix D, form 11 and Notes under R. 1.)

15. Subsequent mortgagees.—The form of the preliminary decree given in the present rule should be adopted to the circumstances of each case. Where puisne mortgagees are impleaded as parties in a suit on a prior mortgage a form similar to the one in use in the Chancery Division in the High Court in England may be found useful.[1] (See also Appendix D, forms 9 to 11.) The chief point to be noted in such cases is to give effect to the principle "redeem up, and foreclose down". The first right of redemption belongs to the next puisne mortgagee. If he makes default, he is foreclosed and the right to redeem devolves on the next puisne mortgagee and in the event of his default, the right belongs to the next mortgagee and the process goes on until the mortgagor is reached. If the mortgagor also fails to redeem he will be foreclosed.[2]

O. 34, R.2, Notes 15—18.

A subsequent mortgagee who has been added as a party to a suit for foreclosure by a prior mortgagee and who pays off the decree amount can on his being transposed as plaintiff apply for a final decree.[3]

16. "Pays into Court".—Under S. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act the defendant could pay the mortgage money under the preliminary decree to the mortgagee plaintiff direct or into the Court.[1] But the present rule requires the payment to be made only into the Court in all cases.[2] As to when and how far a payment made out of Court can be recognised by the Court dealing with an application to pass a final decree, see Note 14 to R. 5, infra.

17. "On a day within six months".—The rule only fixes the outer limit for the period to be fixed for the payment of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree. The Court has a discretion to fix any smaller period it thinks fit.[1] Where accounts are directed to be taken, the six months period should be calculated not from the date of the preliminary decree but from the date on which the Court confirms and countersigns the accounts taken under its decree.[2] [See sub-R. (1), Cl. (c) and sub-Cl. (i)]. As to the question whether, when the preliminary decree is appealed against, the period fixed for payment runs from the date of the first Court's decree or from the date of the appellate decree. (See also Note 5 to R. 3 and Note 9 to S. 148.)

18. Extension of time.—Sub-R. (2) of this rule which corresponds to the proviso to the old sub-R. (2) of R. 3, empowers the Court on good cause being shown, to extend the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree.[1] But the mortgagor is not entitled to an extension of time as of right.[2] The rule itself provides that extension of time may be granted "on good cause shown".[3] It is not a good ground for extending the time that the mortgagor was under a misconception that payment within the period fixed was unnecessary.[4] As to what constitutes "good cause" see the undermentioned cases.[4-a] Time may be extended even after the expiry of the period originally fixed[5] provided a final decree has not been passed.[6] As the right to redeem continues until the final decree is actually passed,[7] the mortgagor may pay in the money at any time before the final decree is passed though there may not be an express order extending the period.[8] This is made clear now by the substitution of the words "before a final decree has been passed" at the beginning of R. 3 in place of the words "on or before the day fixed" which occurred in the old rule. Even where a preliminary decree is passed by consent of parties, the Court can exercise its power of extending the period fixed for payment, if there is nothing in the decree excluding such power.[9]

An express application for extension of time is not necessary.[10] Nor need the application, where one is made, be in writing.[11] But the Court cannot postpone the passing of a final decree, on the application of a third party.[12]

19. Plaintiff to apply, for final decree.—The rule [sub- R. (1) (c) sub-Cl. (ii)] makes it clear that plaintiff has to apply for a final decree for foreclosure if the defendant fails to pay the mortgage money within the time fixed by the Court. In one case it was contended that a final decree passed on the application of the transferee from the mortgagee was not binding on the mortgagor. It was held that as the decree was passed in the presence of the mortgagor he could not subsequently object to it.[1]

20. Mortgage of chattels and intangible property.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a mortgagee of chattels is entitled to sue for foreclosure.[1] The High Court of Bombay,[2] the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur,[3] and Oudh,[4] on the other hand, have held that he is not so entitled. A mortgagee of a turn of worship is entitled according to the Calcutta High Court to sue for foreclosure of that right,[5] the turn of worship being regarded as intangible property.

22. Equitable mortgage of personal property.—See Note 4, ante.

23. Appeal.—An appeal lies from a preliminary decree.[1] Under O. 43, R. 1(o) an appeal lies from an order refusing to extend time under this rule but not from an order granting an extension of time.[2] An application for revision may, however, lie from such orders.[3] No appeal lies against an order refusing to extend time, after a final decree has been passed.[4] See also S. 97, ante.

Final decree in foreclosure suit.

R. 3. [New Act IV of 1882, S. 87.] (1) Where, before a final decree debarring the defendant from all right to redeem[3] the mortgaged property has been passed, the defendant makes payment into Court of all amounts due from him under sub-rule (1) of rule 2, the Court shall, on application made by the defendant in this behalf, pass a final decree—

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents referred to in the preliminary decree, and, if necessary,—

(b) ordering him to re-transfer at the cost of the defendant the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree, and, also, if necessary,—

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property.

(2) Where payment in accordance with sub-rule (1) has not been made,[6] the Court shall, on application made by the plaintiff in this behalf, pass a final decree[7] declaring that the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him are debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary, ordering the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession of the property.

(3) On the passing of a final decree under sub-rule (2), all liabilities to which the defendant is subject in respect of the mortgage or on account of the suit shall be deemed to have been discharged.[9]

1. Transfer of Property Act, S. 87.—This rule corresponds to S. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act with the following differences:—

(1) The present rule provides for the passing of a decree when the defendant pays up the mortgage money within the time allowed. But, S. 87 merely provided that, in such a case, the defendant should, if necessary, be put in possession of the mortgaged property.

(2) Under the present rule, if the defendant does not pay the mortgage money within the time allowed, a final decree is passed. But under S. 87 the procedure was to pass an order absolute for foreclosure.

2. Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929.—The present rule has been amended by Act, XXI of 1929. The chief points of distinction between the old rule and the new rule are:—

(1) The words "before a final decree debarring the defendant from all right to redeem the mortgaged property has been passed" have been substituted for the words "on or before the day fixed".

(2) Under the amended rule, the defendant mortgagor has to apply to the Court for a decree in his favour if he pays the mortgage money within the time allowed. The old rule did not require this.

(3) The new rule makes it clear that the decree to be passed under it is a final decree.

(4) The proviso to sub-R. (2) of the old rule, regarding the Court's power to extend the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money has been transferred to R. (2) above.

(5) Sub-R. (3) makes it clear that the passing of a final decree for foreclosure, discharges not only the mortgage debt but all liability of the defendant in respect of the mortgage or on account of the suit thereon.

3. "Where, before a final decree has been passed debarring defendant from all right to redeem".—The substitution of the words "before a final decree has been passed, etc.," for the words "on or before the day fixed" now makes it clear that though a mortgagor has not paid the mortgage money under the preliminary decree for foreclosure within the time allowed by the Court, he does not lose his right to redeem but can exercise the right till a final decree for foreclosure is actually passed.[1] In view of this the undermentioned decisions[2] prior to the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929 which disclose a conflict of Judicial opinion are only of academic interest now. Where a mortgagee, after the date fixed for payment but before a final decree for foreclosure is passed, enters into possession of the mortgaged property, he does so in his capacity as mortgagee and not as owner.[3] But if he remains in possession and the mortgagor keeps quiet for a long time the mortgagor will be held to have acquiesced in the mortgagee holding the property as his own and may thus be deprived of his right on the ground of estoppel.[4]

4. Power to enlarge time.—See Note 18 to R. 2 above and S. 148, Note 9.

5. Effect of appeal on time fixed for payment.—O. 41, R. 5 expressly provides that an appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from, except so far as the appellate Court may order to that effect. Hence the mere pendency of an appeal from the preliminary decree does not extend the time fixed, and is no bar to the passing of a final decree[1] unless the appellate Court expressly or by necessary implication extends the period for payment.[2] Nor is it a ground for enlarging the time fixed by the preliminary decree for payment.[3]

As to the effect of a decree passed in, or dismissal of the appeal on the time fixed by the preliminary decree, see S. 148, Note 9 and the undermentioned cases.[4]

O. 34, R.3, Notes 6—7.

6. Where payment in accordance with sub-R. (1) has not been made.—A mortgagee is not bound to accept a smaller sum than that due as part satisfaction of his decree but is entitled to insist on a final decree for foreclosure being passed in his favour where the whole of the amount found due to him is not paid into the Court.[1] But this principle only applies where there is no dispute as to the sum due.[2] Thus, where the mortgagor deposits in Court the sum found due by the lower Court but the sum is increased by the appellate Court, the payment by the mortgagor reduces the debt pro tanto and interest is payable afterwards only on the balance.[3] The mortgagee is not bound to accept payment after the passing of the final decree for foreclosure.[4]

7. Final decree for foreclosure.—The rule makes it clear that the decree to be passed under this rule is a final decree. The procedure under the Transfer of Property Act was to obtain an order absolute for foreclosure or sale.[1]

An application for a final decree for foreclosure should be made by the plaintiff,[2] and he should make it to the Court of first instance even though the preliminary decree was modified in appeal.[3] But a defendant who is present and allows a final decree to be passed on the application of a transferee from the plaintiff will be estopped from questioning the validity of the decree afterwards.[4]

The legal representatives of a party who dies after a preliminary decree can and should be brought on record under the provisions of O. 22 in the proceedings to obtain the final decree in as much as the suit must be deemed to be pending till a final decree is passed.[5] But a person, who was not a party to the preliminary decree, cannot be added as a party to the proceedings to obtain a final decree.[6]

No notice is necessary to be given under this rule to the defendant before a final decree is passed,[7] though, in practice, it is generally given on grounds of justice and equity.[8] Notice is, however, necessary where the defendant happens to be a minor.[9] But the failure to give notice is, if anything, only an irregularity and, unless the merits of the case are affected, will not invalidate the proceedings.[10]

An ex parte final decree can be set aside under O. 9, R. 13 if "sufficient cause" within the meaning of that rule is established.[11] The dismissal for default of an application for a final decree does not preclude a fresh application for the same purpose.[12]

The procedure for obtaining a final decree applies to preliminary decrees passed on compromise between the parties[13] unless, the decree, by its terms, provides for execution on default without any fresh decree being passed.[14] A conditional decree for foreclosure is not contemplated by the rule.[15]

Where a party is entitled to pre-emption on foreclosure the right arises, not on the expiry of the period fixed for payment, but on the passing of the final decree for foreclosure,[16] as, until then, the ownership of the mortgaged property vests in the mortgagor.[17]

An omission to draw up a final decree is only an irregularity so that where a Court erroneously passed an order absolute instead of a final decree it was held that the order could be enforced by execution.[18] See also the undermentioned cases.[19]

8. Partial foreclosure.—The nature of the proceedings for foreclosure is such that a mortgage must be foreclosed as a whole or not at all. Thus where a suit for foreclosure is decreed only with respect to some of the properties but dismissed with regard to others and an appeal is filed from that portion of the decree which dismisses the suit, the mortgagee cannot first obtain a final decree in respect of the portion of the decree favourable to him and then, on succeeding in the appeal as to the rest, another final decree in respect thereof.[1]

9. Discharge of debt, etc. on foreclosure.—The present rule makes it clear that on the passing of a final decree for foreclosure, not only the mortgage debt but all the defendant's liabilities in respect of the mortgage as well as for the costs of the suit become discharged.[1] The mortgagor's right to redeem revives if, notwithstanding the foreclosure, the mortgagee pursues his personal remedy against the mortgagor.[2] Where a person holding several mortgages on the same property forecloses under the first mortgage, it will be inequitable to allow him to sue the mortgagor personally for the debt secured by the second mortgage.[3]

See the undermentioned case.[4]

10. Delivery of title-deeds.—A mortgagor can institute a separate suit to recover compensation for loss of title-deeds; the Court may also grant, in the mortgage decree itself, an alternative relief for damages for such loss.

But if no such alternative relief for damages is provided for in the preliminary and final decrees the Court cannot grant it in execution.[1] 11. Limitation for application for final decree.—See Note 12 to R. 5, infra.

12. Application for execution of final decree.—An application for the execution of a final decree is governed by Art. 182 of the Limitation Act.[1]

A final decree in a mortgage suit may be adjusted out of Court like any other decree and O. 21, R. 2 applies thereto.[2] Where a mortgage decree is time-barred it cannot be enforced, the mortgage itself having merged in the decree.[3] S. 48 of the Code applies to a final decree under O. 34, though the preliminary decree, on which it was based, had been passed under the Transfer of Property Act.[4] Where in a foreclosure decree against the defendants, costs are awarded to the defendants, O. 21, R. 19 is no bar to their executing the decree for costs.[5] Where a foreclosure decree contains no direction for delivery of possession, the mortgagee cannot obtain possession by applying in execution. The proper course is to apply for an order for possession.[6]

13. Appeal.—It is clear under O. 34 that a final decree is a decree and appealable as such. Even under the Transfer of Property Act, an order absolute was held to be appealable as a decree.[1]

14. Court-fee.—Ad valorem Court-fee is payable on an appeal against a final decree in a mortgage suit.[1]

1. Transfer of Property Act, S. 88.—The provision as to the payment of subsequent costs and interest, to the mortgagee out of the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property, is new. The present rule is not retrospective in effect so as to affect decrees already passed under the Transfer of Property Act at the time of coming into force of the new Code.[1]

2. Amendments subsequent to 1908.—The present rule has been amended extensively by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929. The material changes introduced by the amendment are as follows:—

(1) The new rule makes it clear that the decree under it is a preliminary decree.

(2) If the mortgagor makes default in payment, the mortgagee has to apply for a final decree for sale.

(3) The rule makes it clear that the mortgagee should be paid out of the sale proceeds not only subsequent costs and interest but also subsequent charges and expenses properly incurred in respect of the mortgage security.

(4) Sub-R. (2) enables the Court to extend the time fixed for payment. There was no such provision in the old rule.

(5) Sub-R. (3) corresponding to sub-R. (2) of the old rule is now expressly limited to anomalous mortgages, while sub-R. (2) of the old rule applied to all mortgages other than mortgages by conditional sale.

(6) Sub-R. (4) makes express provision for the adjudication of the rights of subsequent mortgagees who are joined as parties to a suit by a prior mortgagee.

3. Who may obtain a decree for sale.—The right to sue for sale or foreclosure is conferred by S. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. A decree for sale cannot be obtained by a usufructuary mortgagee as such or a mortgagee by conditional sale as such. Such a decree can be obtained only by a simple mortgagee, an English mortgagee, an equitable mortgagee and an anomalous mortgagee. See Note 4 to R. 2 and the undermentioned cases.[1] As to the rights of sub-mortgagees, see Note 9 to R. 1.

4. Decree for money in suit for sale.—In a suit on a mortgage, it is open to a mortgagee to relinquish his security and to content himself with a simple money decree.[1] A mere decree for money which creates a charge on immoveable property for the decretal amount[2] or which authorises the decree-holder to enforce the decree by selling certain property[3] is not a "preliminary decree" on a mortgage under this rule.

5. Form of decree.—The forms in Appendix D for decrees in suits relating to mortgages have been greatly changed by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929. For the form of preliminary decree in suit for sale, see Appendix D, Forms Nos. 5 and 5-A.

In framing decrees in mortgage suits the provisions contained in O. 34 should not be overlooked.[1] A preliminary decree in a mortgage suit must fix a period within which the mortgagor should pay the mortgage money and the decree should direct a sale of the property only if the mortgagor fails to pay the money within the period fixed.[2]

It will be noted that the form of a preliminary decree for sale under this rule does not contain any provision regarding the mortgagor's personal liability. Any decree which contains such a provision is in contravention of the rules which contemplate the determination of the question only when the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property are not sufficient to pay off the mortgage debt.[3] Accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee should be

Hence, where the prior mortgage is paid off before the sale under it is held, the puisne mortgagee cannot ask for a sale of the property.[2] Where the puisne mortgage includes some properties in addition to those mortgaged to the prior mortgagee the puisne mortgagee cannot ask that, if the sale proceeds of the properties subject to the prior mortgage are not sufficient to pay off both the prior and the puisne mortgages, the additional properties subject to the puisne mortgage should also be sold. His right is only to have his mortgage debt satisfied out of the sale proceeds of the properties subject to the prior mortgage.[3] In a suit by a prior mortgagee impleading both the mortgagor and the puisne mortgagee, the mortgagor cannot be called upon to pay off both the mortgages on pain of his property being sold.[4] The puisne mortgagee's right to have his mortgage debt satisfied out of the surplus sale proceeds is not affected by such sale proceeds being withdrawn from the Court by a person having notice of the puisne mortgagee's title.[5]

7. Courts' power to adjust equities.—Where a sale of the mortgaged properties is impossible, as where the mortgaged properties have been sold for arrears of revenue or of rent the decree must be suitably modified. The Court has inherent power, in such cases, to give appropriate directions for the disposal of the fund which represents the property.[1] See also Note 19 to R. 1.

8. Power to extend time in suit for sale—Sub-R. (2).—See also Note 18 to R. 2.

The provision in sub-R. (2) enabling the Court to extend the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree is new. There was no such provision before the amendment of the present rule by Act XXI of 1929.[1] Hence, it was held that the Court had no power to extend the period fixed for payment of the mortgage money under a preliminary decree for sale.[1-a] It was, however, open to the mortgagor to prevent a sale at any time before it was actually held, by payment under O. 21, R. 69.[2] Even after the sale it was open to him to have the sale set aside at any time before it was confirmed, by applying under O. 21, R. 89.[3] But in some cases it was held that the provisions of the Code as to execution of decrees were not applicable to mortgage decrees.[4] This view is no longer tenable especially since the transfer, to the Civil Procedure Code, of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act relating to suits on mortgages. O. 21, R. 83 expressly provides that that rule does not apply to decrees on mortgage.[5]

In a suit for sale by a puisne mortgagee he was given a decree conditional on his redeeming a prior mortgage within two months from the decree. He failed to redeem the prior mortgage within the period fixed but did so about four months after the decree. It was held that as the defendant had not taken any steps to redeem the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the payment though made after the prescribed time and to a decree absolute for sale.[6]

O. 34, R.4,
Notes
9—10.

9. Decree for sale in a foreclosure suit—Sub-R. (3).—Sub-R. (3) has been taken from S. 25 of the English Conveyancing Act, 1881.[1] The provision occurred even in S. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act and was repeated in O. 34, sub-R. (2) [now sub-R. (3)].

The Transfer of Property Act (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929, has made a slight change in the language of the sub-rule, and it is this. The old rule applied to mortgages other than mortgages by conditional sale. The new rule applies only to anomalous mortgages. The doubt that was felt under the old sub-rule as regards its applicability to anomalous mortgages[2] can thus no longer exist. In such cases, the Court in order to protect the interests of all parties, concerned, can in the exercise of its discretion under this sub-rule pass a decree for sale instead of one for foreclosure, although the suit may be for foreclosure.[3] But the Court will not pass a decree for sale instead of for foreclosure under this sub-rule where it does not appear that the property was undervalued.[4]

Where a plaintiff mortgagee sues for foreclosure on the allegation that the mortgage is one by conditional sale, and it is found that the mortgage is not one by conditional sale, the proper course is not to dismiss the suit but to grant relief under sub-R. (3).[5]

10. Order in which properties should be sold.—Prima facie the decree-holder is entitled to have the mortgaged properties sold in any order he likes.[1-a] There are, however, two important exceptions to this general rule:—

(1) the doctrine of marshalling securities as laid down in the Transfer of Property Act, and

(2) the Court's power under O. 34, R. 4 to adjust the equities between the parties.

Doctrine of marshalling.—S. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, as it stood before its amendment, applied only as between the seller and his buyer.[1] The Section has now been recast by Act XX of 1929 and it is now provided that the buyer can claim the right of marshalling against, not only the seller but also against the mortgagee, but not so as to prejudice his rights. Similarly, the old S. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act provided for marshalling where there were two properties only. The scope of the Section has now been widened by Act XX of 1929 by providing that the Section should apply to cases where there are more than two properties and to all subsequent mortgagees.

Court's power to adjust equities.—Even if the doctrine of marshalling above referred to is not strictly applicable the Court has, under this rule, the power to direct the order in which the various mortgaged properties should be sold, for the purpose of protecting the equities that may exist in favour of any of the parties.[2] Thus where a son undertakes that where the sale of the father's share alone is insufficient to satisfy the mortgage, he will agree that his own share also may be sold, the Court may direct that the interest of the father alone may be sold first.[3]

A and B mortgage certain items of property to C. B then mortgages to D his own items of the mortgaged property. In a suit by C, D cannot claim that the items belonging to A alone should be sold first; the reason is that the mortgagor is not the same in both the mortgages.[4] If, however, the mortgagee has agreed that the properties should be sold in a particular order the agreement should be given effect to.[5] decree makes the mortgagor personally liable for the costs.[3]

13. Succession certificate.—It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay,[1] Calcutta[2] and Madras[3] that S. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (now S. 214 of the Succession Act, 1925) does not apply to suits for sale on mortgages of immoveable property, where no personal decree against the mortgagor is asked for. But a contrary view is held by the Allahabad High Court.[4]

14. Award.—Rr. 4 and 5 of O. 34 do not apply to a decree passed on the award of an arbitrator and hence, a final decree is not necessary in such a case before the decree can be executed.[1]

15. Consent decree.—It is open to the parties to a mortgage suit to enter into a compromise and the Court can, in such a case, pass a decree in terms of the compromise. Such a decree need not conform to the provisions of O. 34.[1] For instance, instead of a lump sum being directed to be paid on a fixed day, a compromise decree may provide that the mortgage money should be paid in certain instalments and that in default the mortgaged property should be brought to sale. In such a case, it is not necessary to have a final decree passed under R. 5 before bringing the property to sale.[2] For it is open to the mortgagor to waive the benefit of the provision which requires that a final decree should be passed before the property can be sold and where by his agreement he has waived the benefit, a final decree which is intended only for his benefit is not necessary.[3] But the decree-holder is not precluded from applying for a final decree in such a case.[4] So also where the parties have agreed that the decree should be drawn up under R. 4, a final decree under R. 5 is necessary.[5] O. 34, R. 14 does not apply to a compromise decree.[6]

A compromise decree on a mortgage may fix a longer period than the six months allowed under the rule, for payment by the mortgagor.[7] The Court has no power to extend the period fixed for payment by a consent decree.[8] Where a compromise mortgage decree authorises its enforcement against properties other than the mortgaged property, execution of the decree by the arrest of the mortgagor is permissible.[9]

See also Note 5 to R. 5.

16. Appeal.—Under O. 43, R. 1(o) an appeal lies from on order refusing to extend time for payment under this rule. But no such appeal lies after the final decree has been passed.[1] In an appeal from a preliminary decree, ad valorem Court-fee is payable on the amount found due and not the amount claimed by the plaintiff.[2] Under S. 97 of the Code, where a preliminary decree is not appealed from, it cannot be questioned in an appeal from the final decree.[3] Under the former Code it was held that an application for taking accounts on a mortgage, directed by a decree thereon, was one in execution and that an order on such application was appealable under S. 244 (now S. 47).[4] This view is not tenable under the present Code.

1. Transfer of Property Act, S. 89.—This rule corresponds to S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. The chief points of distinction between the two provisions are the following:—

(1) Under S. 89 an order absolute for sale was passed while under the present rule a final decree is passed.

(2) Under S. 89, payment of the mortgage money could be made either to the plaintiff or into the Court. Under the present rule, payment has to be made only into the Court.

(3) The words at the end of S. 89, "and thereupon, the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished" have been omitted in the present rule.

(4) The provision for the passing of a decree in case of payment by the mortgagor within the proper time is new.

2. Amendments after 1908.—The chief changes introduced in the rule by the Amendment Act, XXI of 1929 are as follows:—

(1) The present rule makes it quite clear that the decree under it is a final decree.

(2) Upon payment of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree, the present rule requires the mortgagor to apply for a final decree.

O. 34, R. 5, Notes 2–4.

(3) The provision in Sub-R. (1) as to the defendant paying the mortgage money at any time before the confirmation of the sale is new.

(4) Sub-R. (2) is new.

3. Scope of the rule.—The present rule applies only where a preliminary decree has been passed under R. 4.[1]

4. Final decree when can be passed.—O. 34 contemplates the passing of a preliminary decree and a final decree in all mortgage suits. The final decree for sale is passed when the payment directed by the preliminary decree has not been made within the proper time. A final decree under R. 5 is necessary only when the decree originally passed is a preliminary decree under R. 4. Hence where only a money decree has been passed, a final decree under the rule is not necessary although the decree may authorise the decree-holder to realise the decree-amount by sale of the judgment-debtor's property.[1] Similarly, where, at the time of the coming into force of the present Code of Civil Procedure, a decree had already been passed under Transfer of Property Act, S. 88, it has been held that a final decree under the present rule is not necessary.[2] But where property is charged with the payment of the decretal amount it was held in the undermentioned case that the proper mode of realising the decree-amount is to obtain a decree absolute for sale and that it was not necessary to attach the property.[3]

Where the plaintiff under a preliminary decree on a mortgage is directed to pay off a prior mortgage before bringing the mortgaged property to sale, he is entitled to apply for a final decree for sale even though he has made the payment only after the time fixed by the decree.[4]

Where the purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption is made one of the defendants to a suit on a mortgage and, after the preliminary decree is passed, obtains an assignment of the mortgagee's rights, he is entitled to apply for a final decree, although only for a proportionately reduced portion of the mortgage-amount.[5] Although a final decree is necessary to be passed before execution, yet a mortgagor who allows execution to take place, without raising any objection, will be estopped from contending that the want of a final decree is fatal to the proceedings.[6] Similarly, it was held under the Transfer of Property Act, that no objection as to the want of a formal order absolute for sale could be raised where execution had once proceeded without objection.[7]

5. Consent decrees and decrees on award.—We have already seen in Note 4 that this rule applies only where a preliminary decree has been passed under R. 4. A consent decree providing for payment by instalments is not a preliminary decree under R. 4 and hence, a final decree under the present rule is not necessary in such a case.[1] Similarly, a decree on an award is not a preliminary decree under R. 4 and no final decree is necessary to be passed.[2] But a decree-holder is not precluded from applying for a final decree where a preliminary decree by consent has been passed.[3] See Note 15 to R. 4 for further notes.

Where a mortgage itself is invalid, as being opposed to a certain statute, it cannot be validated by a consent decree on the mortgage. The mortgagor can resist an application for final decree on the ground that the mortgage is not binding on him.[4]

6. Only one final decree to be passed.—This rule contemplates the passing of only one final decree.[1] Where the preliminary decree is appealed from, the final decree should be based on the appellate decree.[2] From this it was concluded by the Allahabad High Court in the undermentioned case that a final decree cannot be passed pending an appeal from the preliminary decree and a final decree so passed is invalid and inexecutable.[3] But this view has not been accepted by the High Court of Patna,[4] Lahore[5] and Calcutta[6] and has been overruled by the Allahabad High Court itself subsequently.[7] Where a final decree is passed and subsequently the preliminary decree is modified on appeal the Court of first instance may either prepare a new final decree or amend the preliminary decree already passed.[8]

Under S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, successive applications for an order absolute were maintainable, such applications being proceedings in execution.[9]

7. Form of final decree for sale.—For the form of a final decree for sale, see Appendix D, Form 6. Nothing in R. 4 or in this rule requires the specification of the mortgaged property in the decree.[1] Where the mortgage-money is payable under the bond in a lump sum the Court is not justified in allowing it to be paid in instalments.[2]

Where a co-mortgagee was made a party-defendant to a suit for sale on the mortgage and the decree directed a payment to him of a part of the decretal amount, it was held that the form of the decree was correct.[3] See also the undermentioned cases.[4]

8. Court cannot go behind preliminary decree.—When preparing a final decree under this rule, the Court has no power to go behind the preliminary decree.[1] Similarly, the amount fixed in the preliminary decree cannot be altered except for some reason which may have happened subsequent to the preliminary decree.[2]

9. Court to which application for final decree is to be made.—Though the preliminary decree may be modified by the appellate Court, the application for final decree should be made only to the Court of first instance.[1] Under S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was held that the application for an order absolute under S. 89 could be made to the Court charged with the execution of decrees, the proceeding being one in execution.[2]

10. Application for final decree, if and when necessary.—The rule requires that the mortgagee must apply for a final decree.[1] But it has been held that an application for sale of the mortgaged property may be treated as an application for a decree absolute.[2] An application for a final decree in a mortgage suit need not, however, be in writing.[3] Nor need the plaintiff, in his application, describe the properties with respect to which he asks for final decree for sale and therefore, if any item is omitted in the application, it cannot be contended that the final decree should not be passed in respect thereof.[4] A benamidar-transferee of a preliminary decree may apply for a final decree.[5]

11. Notice to judgment-debtor, if necessary before passing final decree.—As has been seen in the Note 7 to R. 3, ante, this rule also does not require any notice to be issued to the judgment-debtor before the passing of a final decree though, as a matter of practice, such notice should generally be given, on the principle that a party should be heard before any order is passed against him.[1] Where a final decree has been passed ex parte against a mortgagor to whom no notice has been given of the application for final decree, the Court has inherent jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree in furtherance of justice and equity.[2] For cases under S. 89, Transfer of Property Act, see the undermentioned cases.[3]

See also Note 7 to R. 3, ante.

12. Limitation for application for final decree.—An application for a final decree under O. 34 is not an application for execution.[1] The article of the Limitation Act applicable to such an application is Art. 181 and time begins to run when the right to apply for a final decree accrues.[1-a] On this point, however, there was a conflict of opinion under the Transfer of Property Act. The reason for this was that, under that Act, the procedure was to get an order absolute and not a final decree. Three views were taken of the question:—

(1) An application for an order absolute was an application for execution[2] and was governed by Art. 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877 (now Art. 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908).[3]

(2) The proceedings for an order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act were proceedings in suit[4] and that Art. 178 (now Art. 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908) was applicable to them.[5]

(3) Art. 178 did not apply to applications for order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act as they were not applications

under the Civil Procedure Code, within the meaning of that article[6] and, therefore, there was no period of limitation applicable to such an application.[7]

All these cases are only of academic interest now in view of the fact that it is made quite clear that an application under this rule is for a final decree and not one on execution.

Where the Court, in effect, directs the stay of proceedings for a final decree, limitation runs from the date of the removal of the bar.[7-a]

Where the preliminary decree directs the mortgagee to pay off a prior mortgage as a condition of his enforcing his own mortgage, the time requisite for ascertaining the amount due to the prior mortgagee may be deducted when calculating limitation for an application for final decree.[8] Where, in such a case, no time is fixed for payment to the prior mortgagee, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim that limitation does not begin to run for his application for final decree until he has paid off the prior mortgage, however long he may take to do so; he is only entitled to a deduction of six months from the date of the preliminary decree.[9]

Where, on an application for final decree, an extension of time is granted to the mortgagor, and a fresh application is made by the mortgagee subsequently, it is to be deemed a continuation of the previous application.[10]

Where an appeal is preferred against a preliminary decree, limitation for an application for a final decree runs only from the date of the appellate decree and not from the expiry of the period fixed by the lower Court for payment,[11] though the appellate decree is passed three years after the expiry of the period fixed by the lower Court for payment.[12] But the dismissal of an appeal for non-prosecution does not give rise to a fresh starting point for limitation for an application for final decree.[13] See Note 9 to S. 148.

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a plaintiff, who obtained a decree under the Transfer of Property Act, is bound, on the coming into force of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to apply for a final decree before proceeding to execute his decree. The High Courts of Madras and Patna have held that he is not bound to do so and that the Code will not affect his rights to execute the decree which had vested in him under the old law.[14] The High Court of Bombay has, on the other hand, taken a contrary view.[15] It is, however, clear that where the right to apply for an order absolute is barred by limitation even before the Code of 1908, came into force, no fresh right to apply for a final decree is conferred by the Code.[16]

There is no limitation for the mortgagor's application for deposit of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree.[17] Where an application for a final decree is dismissed, a subsequent application is not for a revival of the previous application.[18]

13. Mortgagor's rights before confirmation of sale.—Even before the amendment of 1929 it was held that the right of a mortgagor to redeem under a mortgage-decree was not lost till the sale was actually held and confirmed.[1] Thus it was held that the mortgagor could apply to stop a sale under O. 21, R. 69,[2] or have the sale set aside under O. 21, R. 89.[3] The amendment of 1929 gives express legislative sanction to the said view, namely, that the mortgagor's right to redeem continues till the confirmation of the sale.

In this connection it may be noted that, under S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, the defendant's right to redeem and the security became both extinguished on the passing of the order absolute.[4] The words "as to the extinguishment" have been omitted in the present rule with the effect that a final decree does not now extinguish the mortgage security or the right to redeem.[5]

Where a period has been fixed for the payment of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree, it is not open to the mortgagor to pay the money before the date fixed with costs and interest calculated up to the date of payment only and avoid further liability for costs and interest.[6]

See also the undermentioned case.[7]

14. Payment into Court.—Unlike the provisions of S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act under which the defendant had to pay the mortgage money either to the plaintiff or into the Court, this rule provides that it should be paid into the Court.[1] But suppose the money is paid out of Court to the mortgagee. Then, if such payment is made after the final decree or after the order absolute (under the Transfer of Property Act) is passed, O. 21, R. 2 will clearly apply and a payment can be certified to the executing Court; in the absence of such certification within the limitation period, the executing Court will not take cognisance of it.[2] Even if the payment is made after the preliminary and before the order absolute or the final decree is passed, the Court executing the final decree cannot, by virtue of the provisions of O. 21, R. 2, recognise such a payment unless certified.[3] On the question whether the Court dealing with an application for a final decree, can recognise such a payment, it has been held by the High Court of Madras[4] and the Chief Court of Punjab[5] that O. 34, R. 5 prescribes only one method of payment, namely, into Court and that a payment out of Court cannot be recognised. On the other hand it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[6] Calcutta,[7] Patna[8] and Rangoon[8-a] and by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur,[9] that such a payment could be certified to the Court (though it is not the executing Court) under the provisions of O. 21, R. 2, that therefore a certified payment can be recognised, or a payment can be certified by the Court dealing with the application to pass a final decree, but that a payment, not so certified within the period of limitation prescribed therefor, cannot be recognised. The High Court of Patna,[10] the Chief Court of Oudh[10-a] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[10-b] have also held that such a payment can be recognised under O. 23, R. 3 as an adjustment of a pending suit, though, in a later case,[11] the Nagpur Court has disagreed with this view on the ground that O. 23, R. 3 cannot apply to a satisfaction of a decree already passed. The High Court of Lahore has also held that O. 23, R. 3 is inapplicable to such a payment.[11-a]

Even in cases arising under the Transfer of Property Act, there was a conflict of opinion, but of a somewhat different nature. It was held by the

O. 34, R. 5, Notes 14—17.

Allahabad High Court and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh, that a proceeding under S. 89 of that Act for obtaining an order absolute was a proceeding in execution, and, therefore, the Court dealing with an application for an order absolute, being an executing Court could not recognise a payment after the preliminary decree unless it had been certified within time.[12] The High Court of Calcutta, on the other hand, held that a proceeding for an order absolute is not one in execution, and that the Court dealing with such application can recognise such payments, especially as S. 89 expressly provided that payment may be to the plaintiff or into the Court.[13]

Where the decree is not one under R. 4, as in the case of a compromise decree, R. 5 does not apply and the Court can recognise payments made out of Court,[14] see also the undermentioned cases.[15]

15. Return of documents relating to property.—Where the preliminary decree does not provide for the payment of damages by the plaintiff to the defendant if the plaintiff fails to deliver all the documents relating to the mortgaged property as directed by the decree, the Court cannot grant such relief by way of execution. The mortgagor may sue separately for damages.[1]

16. Dismissal of mortgagee's application for final decree.—O. 34, R. 5 requires only that the plaintiff should apply for a final decree. His subsequent absence is not any ground for dismissing his application. If it is dismissed on this ground, it should be set aside and a final decree passed.[1] The Court can also entertain a fresh application for final decree in such a case.[2] An application for final decree cannot be dismissed for failure to give list of properties in respect to which the final decree was prayed for, or for a wrong calculation of interest.[3] mortgaged properties are to be sold, see Note 10 R. 4 and the undermentioned case.[1] But the Court cannot overrule any specific provisions in the mortgage-deed itself concerning the matter.[1-a]

Where the mortgaged property has been compulsorily acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, the rights of the mortgagee are transferred to the compensation awarded under the Act.[2]

Similarly, where a share in joint family property has been mortgaged, and subsequent thereto there is a bona fide partition of family properties in which the specific property mortgaged is allotted to another co-parcener, the mortgagee can only proceed against the property allotted to his mortgagor.[3] A mortgagee cannot release from his claim any portion of the properties so as to prejudice the persons interested in the other portions.[4]

Where the judgment-debtor contends that the decree refers to some other property than the one proceeded against by the judgment-creditor, it is for him to show which that property is.[5]

18. Power to enlarge time.—R. 4 as amended by Act, XXI of 1929 empowers the Court to enlarge the time fixed for payment of the mortgage money under a preliminary decree. This renders obsolete the cases[1] before Act XXI of 1929 which held that as there was no provision in R. 5 (as there was in R. 3 or R. 8) for enlargement of time, the Court had no power to enlarge the time fixed by a preliminary decree for payment.

Where a preliminary decree is appealed from but the appellate decree merely confirms the lower Court's decree, the time fixed for payment by the lower Court's decree is not in any way extended.[2] See Note 9 to S. 148.

19. Effect of sale under mortgage decree.—The effect of a sale under an ordinary money-decree is to vest in the purchaser the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. But a sale under a mortgage-decree passes the interests both of the mortgagor as well as of the mortgagee.[1] Where the mortgagee has waived his claim against a particular mortgagor, the sale does not operate on the rights of that mortgagor.[2]

Any enlargement which takes place in the interest of the mortgagor subsequent to the final decree enures for the benefit of the auction-purchaser.[3] On the other hand, he is liable to pay the Government Revenue accruing due on the property after the purchase.[4]

A mortgagee-decree-holder purchasing the mortgaged property in execution of his decree is not bound to give credit to the mortgagor for the market-value of the property but only for the actual price for which he purchased it.[5]

A mortgagee who himself purchases the mortgaged property in execution of his decree for sale becomes the owner of the property and cannot maintain, as against subsequent purchasers, the position that the mortgage still remained an encumbrance.[5-a]

See also the undermentioned cases.[6]

20. Execution of final decree for sale.—Proceedings for sale under a final decree or under an order absolute are proceedings in execution.[1] Consequently, the Court executing the final decree cannot go behind the decree,[2] though, by consent of parties, accounts not allowed by the decree can be taken in execution.[3] A mere preliminary decree under R. 4 is incapable of execution it is only the final decree that can be executed.[4] But where, in a case under the Transfer of Property Act, a decree was executed without an order absolute having been obtained, and the judgment-debtor did not raise any objection to such course at the proper time, it was held that he was estopped from raising the contention subsequently that the decree was not executable.[5] A decree for sale providing in terms that the rights of prior mortgagees should not be prejudiced is not incapable of execution.[6]

No attachment is necessary before sale under a mortgage decree[7] and, consequently, O. 21, R. 58 does not apply to claims preferred against the execution of mortgage-decrees.[8] Under S. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) the restrictions imposed by S. 60 of the Code are applicable to mortgage-decrees also.[9]

The transferee of the mortgagor's interests after the final decree is not a necessary party to the execution-proceedings.[10]

A Court can sell under a mortgage-decree only the property comprised in the mortgage,[11] and the mortgagee, cannot, in execution of his mortgage-decree, seek any remedy against the other properties of the mortgagor.[12]

Proceedings for execution of a final decree for sale can be stayed under O. 41, R. 6 of the Code.[13]

O. 21, R. 83, of the Code, does not, under the express terms thereof, apply to mortgage-decrees.[14]

21. Transfer of final decree.—A transfer of a final decree for sale does not require registration.[1] the mortgagor from receiving the income of the mortgaged property. It can only bring the property to sale.[1]

23. Construction of mortgage-decree.—See the undermentioned cases.[1]

24. Appeal.—An appeal lies from a final decree for sale as from any other decree. Such decree is therefore not open to revision under S. 115.[1]

An order rejecting an application for a final decree amounts to a dismissal of the suit and, as such, is appealable as a decree.[2]

A decision as to the order in which the mortgaged properties should be sold may amount to a decree if it affects the rights of co-defendants inter se.[3]

See S. 97, Notes 1 and 5 also in the question as to whether, when, and how far, a preliminary decree can be attacked in an appeal from a final decree.

25. Court-fee.—An appeal from a final decree for sale should be stamped with an ad valorem Court-fee and not as an appeal from an order.[1] Similarly, the Court-fee on an appeal against an order rejecting an application for a final decree is ad valorem on the amount claimed.[2]

mentioned cases.[2]

27. Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.—A decree for sale upon a mortgage under S. 15 (b) of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not a decree nisi and no final decree is necessary before it can be enforced.[1] But the award of a conciliator under S. 44 of the Act was held to be not exempt from the requirements of S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act.[2]

28. Limitation for application for execution of final decree.—Art. 182 of the Limitation Act applies to an application for the execution of a final decree for sale passed under this rule;[1] and time runs under that article from the date of the final decree.[2] But when there has been an appeal, time runs from the appellate decree.[3] Where an appeal to the Privy Council is dismissed for non-prosecution, the executable decree is that of the lower Court and Art. 182 applies.[4] See also the undermentioned case.[5]

29. Nature of proceedings for final decree.—There was a conflict of decisions, before the coming into force of the present Code of Civil Procedure, as to whether proceedings for order absolute under S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act were proceedings in execution of the decree under S. 88 or proceedings in the suit itself, some cases taking the former view[1] and others taking the latter view.[2] This conflict is now settled under the new Code which makes it clear that a decree under R. 4 is incapable of execution[3] and that the proceedings under R. 5 are proceedings in the suit itself for a supplemental decree and not proceedings in execution.[4] Hence, the provisions of O. 22 apply to proceedings for final decree.[5] Similarly, the doctrine of lis pendens applies to such proceedings.[6] But O. 1, R. 10 refers to a stage not concluded by a decree and hence does not apply to proceedings for final decree so as to enable the addition of persons who were not parties to the preliminary decree as parties to the proceedings for final decree.[7]

30. Joint decree-holders.—One of several joint decree-holders cannot certify satisfaction of the decree beyond his own interest in the decree so as to bind the other decree-holders.[1]

Under the Transfer of Property Act, where a joint decree under S. 88 of the Act was passed in favour of several persons, some of them could apply for an order absolute in favour of all.[2]

1. Transfer of Property Act, S. 90.—This rule corresponds to S. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, with the difference that the word "found" between the words "are" and "insufficient" is new.

As to the law before the Transfer of Property Act, see the undermentioned cases.[1]

2. Amendments after 1908.—The rule was amended by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929, as follows:—

(1) The words "any sale held under the last preceding rule" have been substituted for the words "any such sale."

(2) The words "on application by him" (plaintiff) are new.

3. Personal decree for balance against mortgagor.—This rule provides that the mortgagee may, by way of application, obtain a decree personally against the mortgagor, for the balance still remaining due to him after the mortgaged property is sold.[1] The object of the rule is to enable such a decree to be passed in the mortgage suit itself and to avoid multiplicity of proceedings.[1-a] In fact, a separate suit for enforcing the personal liability would be barred under the provisions of O. 2, R. 2.[2]

A personal decree under this rule, will, however, be granted only after the mortgagee has exhausted his remedies against the security, in other words, it will be granted only after the sale has been carried out and the deficiency ascertained; it is a relief which will not be granted to the mortgagee until that stage is reached.[3] The mere fact, therefore, that the plaint does not contain a prayer for such relief[4] or that the original decree does not reserve a liberty to the plaintiff to apply for a personal decree[5] will not preclude the mortgagee from applying under this rule when the deficiency is ascertained. Where a compromise in a mortgage suit provided for payment of the mortgage money in certain instalments and, on default, for execution by sale of the mortgaged properties "in the usual way", but did not reserve any right to the plaintiff to apply for a personal judgment, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that there was nothing to suggest that the plaintiff agreed to forego the benefit of the personal covenant, and that the powers of the Court to give that relief do not depend on O. 34, R. 6 of the Code nor are they derived from the clause in the decree reserving leave to the plaintiff to apply for a personal judgment.[6]

It follows from what has been said above that the rule contemplates a separate decree being passed for the balance; a Court will be acting irregularly, therefore, in providing, in the decree for sale itself, that the mortgagee may proceed personally against the mortgagor for the balance.[7] On the other hand the preliminary decree should not direct that properties, not mortgaged, should not be proceeded against, the question must be left for decision at the proper time.[8] But where, at the time of the original decree, a decision has been given as to the personal liability of the defendant, the question cannot be raised again on general principles of res judicata.[9] A decree for sale, providing for execution thereof personally against the mortgagor in case of deficiency, though contrary to the provisions of R. 6, is not void on that ground. No fresh supplementary decree under R. 6 can be passed[10] or is necessary in such a case,[11] before enforcing the personal liability,

though execution cannot be issued until the mortgage property has been sold and the proceeds found insufficient to satisfy the mortgage.[12]

Similarly the mortgagee is not entitled to proceed against the non-hypothecated properties under the original decree for sale without a personal decree under this rule[12-a] but where execution is allowed against the non-mortgaged properties of the mortgagor, without such a personal decree having been obtained, and the mortgagor fails to object to such procedure, he will be estopped subsequently from objecting to the execution on the ground of the want of a personal decree.[13]

A personal decree under R. 6 can only be based on a decree for sale under which the mortgaged property has been sold. Thus, where a person holds two mortgages over the same property and obtains two decrees upon them but sells the mortgaged property under one of them, he cannot apply for a decree under R. 6 if the balance of the sale proceeds, after satisfying the decree under which the sale is held, is not sufficient to satisfy the other mortgage.[14] Similarly, where a puisne mortgagee who has obtained a decree on his mortgage is joined as a party to a suit on a prior mortgage and the property is sold in execution of the decree on the prior mortgage but the balance of sale proceeds after satisfying the prior mortgage is not sufficient to satisfy the puisne mortgage, the puisne mortgagee cannot obtain a decree under R. 6 for his amount.[15]

The present rule makes it clear that the plaintiff must apply for a decree under this rule and that the Court cannot pass the decree suo motu. The law was the same even before the amendment of the rule in this respect by Act XXI of 1929.[16] But the application need not be in writing nor need it be signed.[17]

O. 34, R. 6, Notes 3—5.

A decree under R. 6 can be made only against the defendants in the original suit.[18]

A personal decree under this rule can be executed either against the person of the mortgagor or by attachment and sale of his other properties.[19] A decree under this rule should not, therefore, direct the realisation of the amount from any specific property.[20]

Although a decree merely declares the amount due to be a charge on the mortgaged property, it should be construed as a mortgage decree for sale to which R. 6 is applicable.[21]

Although a mortgage is invalid, a personal decree may be passed in the same suit against the mortgagor on the basis of the personal covenant in the mortgage deed.[22] A personal decree obtained without informing the Court of a previous refusal by it to grant such a decree, cannot be set aside as fraudulent.[23]

4. Personal liability of purchaser from mortgagor.—The word "defendant" in R. 6 means the defendant mortgagor and a personal decree cannot be passed under the rule against a purchaser of the equity of redemption.[1] This is so even if the purchaser has contracted with the mortgagor to pay off the mortgage and has retained with himself a portion of the consideration for the purpose. The reason is, that there is no privity of contract between himself and the mortgagee.[2]

5. Personal liability is a question of construction of the instrument.—A personal liability to pay the mortgage amount is, in each case, a question of the construction of the mortgage deed.[1] But every simple mortgage[2] and every English mortgage[3] involves, prima facie, a personal obligation to pay. Similarly, prima facie, there is no personal obligation to pay in a usufructuary mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale.[4] See S. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act.) Where the time for payment fixed under the decree nisi was enlarged on condition of the mortgagor paying interest not provided for in the decree, it was held that the mortgagor was personally liable for the payment of such interest.[5]

6. Personal decree against person not the mortgagor.—The word "defendant" in the rule means as has been seen in Note 4 above, the mortgagor defendant.[1] Where a mortgage bond was executed by the Court of Wards on behalf of a ward, a decree may be passed against the ward under this rule for the balance of mortgage money due after the sale of the mortgaged property and appropriation of the sale proceeds.[2] A personal decree against the managing member of a Hindu joint family binds the junior members of the family though they were not parties to the suit.[3]

7. Personal decree against the heirs of the mortgagor.—Where mortgaged property is found to be insufficient to satisfy a mortgage decree obtained against the heirs of a mortgagor, a decree may be passed against them under this rule to the extent of the assets of the deceased in their hands.[1] Where a decree under this rule exempts the person, and property, of the sons of the mortgagor, who is the manager of a joint Hindu family, but a decree is passed against them to the extent of the assets of the mortgagor in their hands, the assets received by the sons by survivorship on the death of the father are liable under the decree.[2] But when the son's share is exempted from the mortgage decree against the father, it is also exempt from a decree under the present rule.[3]

8. Personal remedy under compromise decree.—The fact that the original decree was a compromise decree is no bar to a personal decree being passed under this rule.[1] According to the High Courts of Bombay[2] and Calcutta[3] a compromise decree in a mortgage suit may be executed against the mortgagor personally without any decree being passed under R. 6 although it does not expressly provide for personal relief. But the Patna High Court has held that a decree under this rule is necessary in such a case.[4] Where the compromise decree itself expressly provides for personal relief, a fresh decree under this rule is not necessary.[5]

9. Right of mortgagee to attach other properties of mortgagor before date fixed for payment of mortgage money.—After the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit and before the date fixed for the payment of the mortgage money, if there is a reasonable probability of the mortgaged property not being sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, the Court can order the attachment of the other properties of the mortgagor if it is satisfied as to the existence of the conditions laid down in O. 38, R. 5. The fact that under O. 34, R. 6 no personal decree can be obtained until the mortgaged properties are sold does not affect the plaintiff's rights under O. 38, R. 5.[1]

10. "Where net proceeds of any such sale are found insufficient."—The opening words of the rule make it clear that a decree under the rule can only be passed after the mortgaged property has been sold and it is found that the sale proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt.[1] But if a personal decree is actually passed before the sale and the mortgagor does not object, he is estopped from questioning the validity of such personal decree later on.[2] If the mortgaged property, through no fault of the mortgagee, has been destroyed by fire or otherwise ceased to exist or to be available for sale, the plaintiff is not bound to go through the farce of bringing the property to sale before applying for a decree under the rule.[3] Thus, where the mortgagee is unable to sell a portion of the mortgaged properties by reason of their being situated in a Native State which will not execute the decree of a British Indian Court and the sale proceeds of the remaining portion of the properties are not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage, the decree-holder is entitled to a personal decree against the judgment-debtor.[4] Similarly, where a mortgage of joint family property by the father of a Hindu joint family is found to be not for legal necessity, it has been held by the Madras High Court that a conditional decree may be passed against the father personally and the sons' share in the joint family property for the recovery of the balance that may remain due to the mortgagee after the sale of the father's share of the mortgaged property (without the son's shares being put to sale).[5] Where a sale in execution of a decree on a mortgage is set aside on the ground that the mortgagor has no saleable interest in the mortgaged property, a personal decree may be passed against the mortgagor, because, the mortgagee, having been compelled to refund the entire purchase money, the net sale proceeds are nil and therefore insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt.[6]

O. 34, R.6, Note 10.

A personal decree should not be passed against the mortgagor till the entire mortgaged property ordered to be sold has been sold and the proceeds are found insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt.[7] But it is open to the mortgagee in the plaint to give up his claim against any portion of the mortgaged property and obtain a decree for sale in respect of the rest. If in such a case, the sale proceeds of the portion ordered to be sold are not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, the plaintiff may obtain a personal decree against the mortgagor.[8]

The sale of the mortgaged property need not be necessarily a judicial sale. The rule covers also a private sale.[9] Where the mortgagee himself purchases the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage decree, with the leave of the Court, the leave to bid puts him in the same position as any other purchaser and he is bound to give credit only for the amount bid by him and may apply for a personal decree for the balance of the mortgage money remaining due after deducting such amount.[10]

Where a portion of the mortgaged property was acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the mortgagee's remedy was to bring to sale the rest of the property and then, if there is a balance due, to apply for a personal decree.[11] But the Calcutta High Court has held that where the mortgaged property is compulsorily acquired by the Government, the mortgage lien is transferred to the compensation money standing to the credit of the mortgagor in the collectorate and the mortgagee is entitled, in execution of a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, to take out such money without obtaining a further decree under the present rule.[12]

11. "Amount due".—The "amount due" is the amount for the recovery of which a decree for sale has been previously passed.[1] Costs awarded to the mortgagee form an integral part of the "amount due".[2] A puisne mortgagee paying off a prior encumbrance is entitled to a personal decree for the deficit due to his having paid off the prior mortgage.[3]

12. "Legally recoverable".—A personal decree cannot be passed in every suit for sale upon a mortgage; but only where the defendant by his contract or otherwise is under a personal obligation to pay the mortgage debt[1] and the plaintiff's right to enforce the personal obligation is not barred by limitation at the date of the suit for sale.[2]

For further information, see Note 17, below.

13. "Legally recoverable otherwise than out of the property sold".—These words mean, by way of illustration, that the balance must be a balance which the mortgagee is not precluded, by the terms of the mortgage, from realising otherwise than out of the property sold or a balance the recovery of which is not barred by limitation.[1]

14. Prior and puisne mortgagees.—A puisne mortgagee is not a 'defendant' against whom a personal decree may be passed, there being no privity of contract between him and the plaintiff.[1]

15. Costs against puisne mortgagee.—A prior mortgagee is not entitled to a personal decree for costs against a puisne mortgagee.[1] As seen

16. Insolvency of mortgagor.—Where pending a suit by a mortgagee on his mortgage, the mortgagor is declared an insolvent the plaintiff can still proceed against the mortgaged property.[1] If the mortgaged property is not sufficient to pay the debt, and the mortgagor is personally liable under the mortgage, the mortgagee may prove for the balance in the insolvency proceedings along with the other creditors of the mortgagor, if the personal liability was not time-barred at the date of the institution of the suit on the mortgage.[2] But can the mortgagee obtain a personal decree under this rule in such a case? No, according to the Allahabad High Court.[3] Yes, according to the Lahore High Court[4] and the Oudh Chief Court.[5]

17. Limitation.—We have seen (Note 12) that a balance is not 'legally recoverable' if the personal remedy is barred by limitation at the date of the suit for sale. Art. 132 of the Limitation Act is confined to suits to recover the mortgage money from the mortgaged property and does not apply to the personal remedy under a mortgage.[1] The personal remedy is governed by the six years' period of limitation in the case of registered instruments[2] and by the three years' period in the case of unregistered instruments[3] and time runs from the date on which the mortgage amount becomes due.[4] If the right to a personal decree is not barred at the date of the institution of the suit, the plaintiff is entitled to such a decree in the case of a deficiency, though the application for the personal decree is made at a time when a suit for the personal remedy would be barred.[5] If a decree is barred under this rule, it is barred in its entirety and a personal decree cannot be passed for costs alone where the right is barred as regards principal and interest.[6] But though the mortgagee's personal remedy may be barred as regards the principal, he is entitled to a personal decree for interest accrued within six years from the suit for sale, because so long as the mortgage debt is not time-barred, the personal liability for the payment of interest continues.[7] An acknowledgment by one co-mortgagor alone is not sufficient to keep alive a mortgage debt as against all the co-mortgagors.[8]

The plaintiff's application for a personal decree has to be made under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act, within three years from the date on which the right to apply for a personal decree accrues.[9] S. 6 of the Limitation Act does not apply to such an application, inasmuch as it is not an application for execution within that section.[10]

Where a mortgage decree provides for the sale of the mortgaged property and for realisation of any deficiency from the other properties of the mortgagor, the 12 years period under S. 48 of the Code for enforcing the personal liability runs from the date of the decree and not from the date of the sale of the mortgaged property.[11] A contrary view was taken in the following cases.[12]

The limitation for the execution of a personal decree runs from the date of the drawing up of a formal decree and not from the making of an order for personal decree.[13]

18. Succession certificate.—A personal decree cannot be passed in favour of the heirs of a mortgagee in the absence of a succession certificate produced by them.[1] But a person who has succeeded to the estate of a deceased mortgagee by the right of survivorship need not produce a succession certificate before he can obtain a personal decree against the mortgagor.[2]

19. Notice.—Where a decree-holder applies for a personal decree against the judgment-debtor under this rule, the proper procedure for the Court is to issue notice to the judgment-debtor calling upon him to show cause why the application should not be granted and to hear his objection, if any.[1] But in the absence of fraud, a suit does not lie to set aside an ex parte personal decree under the rule, on the ground of failure to serve notice on the judgment-debtor.[2] An order directing execution to issue against the judgment-debtor personally without a supplemental decree under this rule should not be passed without notice to the judgment-debtor.[3]

20. Execution of personal decree.—An executing Court cannot entertain any question as to the validity of a personal decree which has become final.[1] (See Notes to S. 38, ante.) A mortgage decree, until it reaches the stage shown by Transfer of Property Act, S. 90 (O. 34, R. 6) does not become a money decree to which S. 209 of the Code of 1882 (now S. 34) relates.[2]

21. Appeal.—An order refusing an application for a personal decree under the rule is a decree and appealable as such.[1] Ad valorem Court-fee is payable on an appeal from such an order as well as on an appeal from a decree under the rule.[2] An application for a personal decree is not a 'plaint' and an order returning it for presentation to the proper Court is therefore not appealable under O. 43, R. 1.[3] Where the original mortgage suit was valued at less than Rs. 5,000, an appeal from a personal decree in the suit lies, under S. 21 of the Bengal N.W.P. (now Agra) and Assam Civil Courts Act (U.P. Act, XII of 1887) to the District Judge and not to the High Court though the personal decree be for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000.[4]

1. Legislative changes.—

This rule corresponds to S. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act.

O. 34, R.7, Notes 2—3.

2. Amendments after 1908.—The rule has been amended by Act XXI of 1929. The general changes thus introduced are on the same lines as in the case of Rr. 2 and 4 See Notes under Rr. 2 and 4. Further, in case of default by the mortgagor in payment of the mortgage money within the prescribed time, the old rule provided for foreclosure except where the mortgage was simple or usufructuary and for sale except where the mortgage was one by conditional sale. The present rule has been amended to suit the changes in S. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act as amended by Act XX of 1929, see Notes under R. 2, ante.

3. Scope of the rule.—As this rule corresponds to Rr. 2 and 4, ante in most particulars, the Notes under Rr. 2 and 4 may be consulted under this rule also. The decree under this rule is preliminary and incapable of execution without a final decree being passed.[1] The proceedings after a preliminary decree are proceedings in suit to which the provisions of O. 22, will apply.[2] O. 34 contemplates only one preliminary decree being passed. Hence, it is irregular to first pass a decree for accounts and then again another preliminary decree for redemption. Such a decree for accounts if passed will only have the effect of an interlocutory order for accounts.[3] Where it is found that the money due to the mortgagee has already been paid, a final decree may be at once passed without any preliminary decree.[4] (See R. 9, infra which expressly provides for this.) A decree for possession on condition of the plaintiff's paying a certain sum within a certain time is not a preliminary decree within this rule.[5]

The rule applies only to a suit for redemption against a mortgagee, and not by one co-mortgagor against another who has redeemed the entire mortgage, for redemption of plaintiff's share of the mortgaged property.[6] A compromise decree in a redemption suit, which is itself capable of execution does not require a final decree.[7] No application for a final decree can be made under this rule and R. 8 where a decree had been passed under S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act.[8]

Ordinarily a suit for an account on a mortgage cannot be asked for, unless the mortgagor asks for redemption also.[9] The burden, in suits for redemption, is on the mortgagor of proving the existence of a mortgage[10] and the mere fact that the defendant denies the mortgage is no ground for decreeing possession without any payment by the mortgagor.[11] A conditional decree for redemption on payment of the amount due may be passed even though the Court finds that the mortgage has not been satisfied out of the mortgaged property as alleged in the plaint.[12]

A mortgagor cannot redeem by application, but only can do so by way of suit.[13]

4. Mode of taking accounts—Sub-R. (1). Cl. (a).—We have seen under R. 2, ante that the object of the Legislature is that complete accounts of all amounts due by either party to the other in respect of the mortgage transaction should be taken in a mortgage suit, so as to avoid unnecessary litigation. A mortgagee in possession is bound to account for the rents and profits of the property (see Transfer of Property Act, S. 76), and the mortgagor is entitled to deduct from the mortgage money all sums thus owed by the mortgagee.[1] Where the mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged property, the burden is on him to prove that the mortgage has not been satisfied out of the usufruct of the property.[2] In a suit to redeem a puisne mortgagee who has redeemed a prior mortgage, the mortgagor is liable to pay the amounts of both the mortgages.[3]

Where a prior mortgagee sues on his mortgage without impleading the puisne mortgagee, and purchases the property in execution of his decree, the puisne mortgagee subsequently suing for redemption, is bound to pay, not the sum for which the property was sold, but the amount due on the mortgage up to the date on which the prior mortgagee obtained possession after the purchase.[4] A Court can investigate accounts with a view to seeing whether the mortgage has been satisfied out of the usufruct, even though, in doing so, it has to deal with questions relating to properties lying outside its jurisdiction.[5] In a suit for the redemption of two distinct mortgages, the accounts should be taken separately in respect of each mortgage.[6] A mortgagee who refused a valid tender of the mortgage money does not thereby cease to be a mortgagee and the subsequent accounts between him and the mortgagor should be included in the suit for redemption.[7] In a suit for redemption of a mortgage to which the sub-mortgagee also is joined as a party, the decree should direct accounts to be taken of the mortgage as well as of the sub-mortgage and should provide that out of the mortgage money, the sub-mortgagee should be paid the amount due to him and the balance, if any, should be paid to the mortgagee.[8]

In suits for redemption the accounts should be taken up to the date of actual redemption or sale as the case may be.[9]

5. Interest.—In a suit for redemption, the mortgagee's right to interest is not limited to that accruing during the six years preceding the suit.[1] Where a mortgagee who is entitled to possession obtains a decree for possession, he is not entitled to any interest between the date of the decree and the date of the delivery of possession.[2]

6. Costs.—In a suit for redemption, the mortgagee defendant is entitled to all costs unless he has refused a valid tender of the mortgage money or has otherwise been guilty of misconduct.[1] Such costs are part of the mortgage money and in the absence of any express provision in the decree to the contrary, are not personally recoverable from the mortgagor.[2] Where the plaintiff mortgagor has been awarded costs in such a suit, he is entitled to set off the amount of his costs against the mortgage money payable by him.[3]

7. Subsequent costs, charges and expenses.—The amendments introduced by the Transfer of Property Act (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929, have made clear that the mortgagee is entitled to charges and expenses properly incurred by him in respect of the mortgage security even subsequent to the preliminary decree. Although the rules were not so explicit before the above amendments as they are now, on this point, the law was recognised to be the same even under the old rules.[1]

8. Subsequent interest as provided in R. 11.—R. 7, sub-R. (1), Cl. (c) (i) provides for the payment, by the mortgagor, of interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment under the preliminary decree up to the date of the actual realisation of the mortgage money. This point was not conceded under the old rules.[1]

9. "Pays into Court on a day within six months".—A decree under this rule should state a period within which the mortgage money should be paid.[1] This period may be less than six months.[2] In computing the period so fixed, the date of the decree should be excluded.[3]

If the decree for redemption fixes no period for payment it must be taken as an ordinary decree to which Art. 182 of the Limitation Act would apply.[3-a] But where in a suit for sale by a puisne mortgagee, the preliminary decree directed the plaintiff to pay off the prior mortgage before bringing the mortgaged property to sale, but fixed no period within which the prior mortgage was to be paid off, it was held that, in this respect, the decree was a decree for redemption and the period allowable for payment of the prior mortgage amount could not exceed six months.[4] The rule requires the payment to be made into the Court. As to whether a payment made out of Court can be recognised by the Court, see Note 14 to R. 5 and O. 23, R. 3.

10. "Shall deliver up to the plaintiff....the documents."—On payment of the mortgage money, the mortgagor is entitled to the return of the mortgage bond,[1] and other documents relating to the title to the land. But where the mortgagee-defendant has lost the title-deeds, the executing Court cannot, in the absence of any express provision in the decree to that effect compel him to give security for the value of the property.[2]

11. "Shall re-transfer the property to the plaintiff".—The mortgagee is bound, on redemption, to re-transfer the property to the mortgagor, free from the mortgage and from all encumbrances created by him. Thus, if he has leased the property to another, the lease is not binding on the mortgagor who can, therefore, eject the lessee as a trespasser.[1] The property must be transferred along with the accretions, if any, to the property. Thus, where the mortgagee taking advantage of his position as such, has taken a mortgage of the holding of a tenant, the mortgagor is entitled, on redemption, to the possession of the holding, provided he pays the amount due on its mortgage.[2] The rule requires that a mortgagee with possession should, on redemption, put back the mortgagor in possession.[3]

12. Procedure on default of payment.—The rule provides that on default by the mortgagor in the payment of the mortgage money within the time allowed by the Court, the mortgagee is entitled to apply for a final decree for sale or foreclosure.[1] The present rule provides for a decree for sale in the case of any mortgage other than a usufructuary mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale or an anomalous mortgage which provides only for foreclosure. It provides for a decree for foreclosure in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale or an anomalous mortgage which provides only for foreclosure. Under the rule, as it was, before Act XXI of 1929, a decree for sale was provided for in the case of any mortgage other than one by conditional sale. And a decree for foreclosure was provided for in the case of any mortgage other than a simple or usufructuary one. These changes are in conformity with the changes in S. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act made by Act XX of 1929. See Notes under R. 3, ante for further information. The undermentioned cases decided under the old rule are now only of academic interest.[2]

O. 34. R. 7, Note 13.

13. Extension of time fixed for payment.—The amendments in this rule and in R. 8 made by Act, XXI of 1929 make it clear that the Court can extend the time fixed for payment from time to time and that, till a decree for foreclosure is actually passed, or till the sale is confirmed, the mortgagor can redeem the property. The undermentioned cases[1] decided under the old rules have only an academic interest now. Time for payment may be extended though the period originally fixed may have expired.[2] The use of the expression "extend the time" in the new rule instead of the expression "postpone the day" which occurred in the proviso to old R. 8 makes this clear.[3] Extension of time may be granted irrespective of the nature of the mortgage in question.[4] Even though a decree for redemption may have been passed by the appellate Court, an application for extension of time should be made to the Court of first instance and not to the appellate Court.[5] Where, in a partition suit, the alienation of a certain property belonging to the joint family was found to be binding only to a limited extent and a decree was passed for possession thereof on condition of a certain amount being paid to the alienee within a fixed date, it was held that this was in effect a decree for redemption and that the Court could extend the time fixed for payment.[6] Time fixed by a compromise decree cannot be extended by the Court.[7] S. 148 of the Code does not apply to the extension of time fixed by a decree for redemption.[8] The limitation for an application for a final decree for redemption runs from the date of payment although the Court may have extended the period for payment originally fixed.[9] Where a preliminary decree is simply confirmed in appeal, the period fixed runs only from the decree of the Court of first instance unless the appellate Court extends the period.[10] See Note 9 to S. 148.

14—20.

14. Form of decree.—For the form of a preliminary decree under this rule, see Appendix D, Forms 7, 7-A, 7-B and 7-C. The decree ought not to contain unnecessary declarations.[1] It should not direct that the defendant should not be evicted till he has cut the crops sown by him.[2]

15. Second suit for redemption.—See Note 40 to S. 11.

16. Who can redeem.—See S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act.

If a party, whose title is to some extent imperfect at the date of the institution of the suit, seeks to redeem and is able to prove a perfect title at the hearing of the case, he should have a decree for redemption. Thus if a purchaser in execution sale of the equity of redemption sues for redemption before he has obtained a certificate of sale, but obtains such certificate before the hearing, he should have a decree for redemption.[1] In a suit, by a purchaser of the equity of redemption, for redemption, the mortgagee cannot question the adequacy of the consideration for the sale.[2]

17. Trespass by mortgagor before redemption.—Where a redemption decree was made but the mortgagor, without having made any payment, unlawfully trespasses upon the property and dispossesses the mortgagee in possession, the latter can sue to recover back possession.[1]

18. Court-fee.—See S. 7, Cl. (ix) of the Court-Fees Act. No Court-fee is payable on surplus profits decreed in favour of a mortgagor in a redemption suit.[1]

19. Jurisdiction.—In suits for redemption, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the amount of the principal money secured by the mortgage, and not the value of the property mortgaged.[1]

20. Appeal.—See Notes under Rr. 2 to 6, supra and also under S. 97.

1. Legislative changes.—

The rule corresponds to S. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act.

2. Amendments after 1908.—The rule was amended by the Transfer of Property Act (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929, on the same lines as Rr. 3 and 5, ante. The provision as to extension of time has been transferred to R. 7. Vide Notes under Rr. 3, 5 and 7, ante. Under the old rule, a decree for sale could not be passed only in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale. Under the present rule, no decree for sale could be passed even in the case of usufructuary mortgages.

3. Scope of the rule.—The decree under R. 7 is only a preliminary decree and a final decree under the present rule is necessary to terminate a suit for redemption.[1] As has been seen already in Note 4 to R. 7, in a redemption suit, there should be a complete settlement of all accounts between the parties in relation to the mortgage.[2] (See also Rr. 9 and 10, infra which show that accounts should be taken right up to the date of actual payment of mortgage money and re-transfer of possession.)

4. Decree for redemption.—On payment of the mortgage money before a final decree for sale or foreclosure is passed, the mortgagor is entitled to a final decree for redemption. A mortgagor, can, however, exercise the right of redemption, in the case of a decree for sale, at any time before the sale is confirmed though the final decree for sale may have been passed in the meanwhile. If the redemption is after the final decree for sale, the mortgagor will get an order for the delivery of the title-deeds, etc., as indicated in sub-R. (1). If the mortgagor seeks to redeem the property after the sale and before it is confirmed he must deposit for payment to the auction purchaser, 5 per cent. of the purchase money in addition to the mortgage money. Under sub-R. (1), all rights acquired by the mortgagee under the mortgage must, on redemption, be re-transferred to the mortgagor.[1] The mortgagee in possession need not vacate possession till he has received the full mortgage money.[2]

A mortgagor is not disentitled to a decree for redemption simply because he has attached under his decree for costs against the mortgagee, the mortgage money deposited by himself in Court to the mortgagee's credit, and withdrawn a portion of it.[3]

The mortgagee is not entitled to notice of payment into the Court of the mortgage money under the preliminary decree.[4] Nor is the mortgagor required to make an application to the Court before paying in the money.[5] The refusal of the treasury Officer to accept the mortgage money though paid within the proper time does not amount to default by the judgment-debtor.[6] Where the mortgagor has paid into the Court the sum ascertained by the first Court, pending an appeal by the mortgagee as to the amount due, the mortgagor is entitled to credit for the amount paid though it lapsed to the Government through the failure of the mortgagee to take the money out of Court.[7] Payment to an unauthorised person does not discharge a mortgage.[8]

5. Redemption after due date.—The present rule makes it clear that though a mortgagor has failed to redeem the mortgaged property within the time allowed by the Court, he is entitled to do so at any time before a final decree for foreclosure is passed or a sale of the mortgaged property under a final decree for sale is confirmed. See Note 8, infra.

6. Final decree for foreclosure or sale—Sub-R. (3).—The provision as to the passing of a final decree for foreclosure under the circumstances indicated in the rule is imperative.[1] A final decree for foreclosure or sale can only be passed on application by the mortgagee.[2] A final decree for foreclosure cannot be passed in the case of a simple mortgage.[3] The absence of any provision in the preliminary decree, for the passing of a final decree for sale or foreclosure, is no bar to the passing of such a decree.[4] An application for final decree should be made to the Court of first instance though the preliminary decree was modified in appeal.[5] In the undermentioned case, it was held that the mortgagor himself was entitled to apply for a final decree for sale, if he was not able to pay the mortgage money.[6]

7. Power to enlarge time.—The provision as to the enlargement of time contained in the proviso to the old R. 8 has now been transferred to the present R. 7 by Act XXI of 1929. A payment of the amount due within the time fixed entitles the mortgagor to a final decree for redemption.[1] But the time can be extended by the Court for making such payment under this rule. The principles discussed in Note 18 of R. 2 and in Note 9 to S. 148 apply in general to an extension of time under this rule. Thus the time can be extended even though the time originally fixed has expired.[2] But no extension can be granted unless "good cause" is shown therefor.[3] Nor is the mortgagor entitled to an extension as a matter of right.[4]

The power to extend time applies to all kinds of mortgages.[5] Ordinarily a mortgagor who seeks to pay the money after the time fixed, must apply for extension.[6] The application need not, however, be in any prescribed form and even an application to pay the money may itself be treated as an application for extension.[7] But the application must be made to the Court of first instance,[8] even though the decree may have been confirmed on appeal.[9]

It was held in the undermentioned cases[10] that the power to enlarge time under this rule applies to what are strictly suits for redemption. But where, in a partition suit, it was found that an alienation of joint family property was partially binding on the plaintiff and a decree was passed for possession against the alienee conditional on the payment of a certain sum of money to him within a certain time, it was held by the High Court of Madras that the decree was in effect one for redemption, and that the time fixed by it could be extended under this rule.[11]

Even if the time is not extended, the mortgagor, as has been made clear by this rule, can redeem the property at any time before a final decree for foreclosure is passed, or a sale of the property is confirmed by the Court. And this was the practice followed even before the amendment under Act XXI of 1929 was made.[12] As to the decrees passed before the Transfer of Property Act, see the undermentioned case.[13]

It has been held by the Chief Court of Oudh that even in the case of a compromise decree for redemption, the Court, is entitled under this rule to extend the time in proper cases.[14]

8. Limitation.—Art. 181 of the Limitation Act applies to an application by the mortgagee for a final decree under this rule and time runs from the expiry of the period fixed for payment by the mortgagor.[1] But a mortgagor being entitled to pay the mortgage money at any time before the final decree for foreclosure is passed or before the sale of the mortgaged property is confirmed by the Court, there is no period of limitation applicable to a payment by him of the mortgage money.[2] It has even been held that there is no period of limitation applicable to an application by the mortgagor for a final decree for redemption, it being the duty of the Court to pass such a decree.[3] But under the amendments of the rule made by Act XXI of 1929 even a mortgagor has to apply for a final decree for redemption. Hence, the view taken in the above decision requires reconsideration. Where there has been an appeal against the preliminary decree, the period of limitation for an application for final decree commences not from the expiry of the time fixed for payment but from the date of the appellate decree.[4] An application for extension of time by a decree-holder is a "step-in-aid of execution" within the meaning of Limitation Act, Art. 182 in respect of a subsequent application for sale by him.[5]

9. Appeal.—An order refusing to extend time is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (o).[1] But no appeal lies against an order granting an extension of time.[2] It is doubtful whether an order merely refusing to pass a final decree but leaving it open to the mortgagee to apply again for such a decree is appealable as a decree.[3]

Recovery of balance due on mortgage in suit for redemption.

R. 8-A. [New.] Where the net proceeds of any sale held under the last preceding rule are found insufficient to pay the amount due to the defendant, the Court, on application by him, may, if the balance is legally recoverable from the plaintiff otherwise than out of the property sold, pass a decree for such balance.

[Cf. R. 6 above.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule is new and was inserted by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929. The rule provides for a personal decree being passed in a suit for redemption against the mortgagor where the proceeds of a sale held on the default of the mortgagor to pay the mortgage money in time under a decree for redemption are not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt. The rule corresponds to R. 6, ante which provides for a personal decree being passed in a suit for sale by the mortgagee.

The words "the last preceding rule" refer to R. 8 as amended by Act, XXI of 1929 under which no decree for sale could be passed in the case of a usufructuary mortgage as was possible under the old rule. Where, therefore, a decree for sale was passed in respect of a usufructuary mortgage under the old rule and a sale is held in pursuance thereof, it was held that such a sale could not be said to have been held "under the last preceding rule" within the meaning of this rule, and that consequently no personal decree for the balance remaining due could be passed under this rule.[1]

Decree where nothing is found due or where mortgagee has been overpaid.

R. 9. [New.] Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, if it appears, upon taking the account referred to in rule 7, that nothing is due to the defendant or that he has been overpaid, the Court shall pass a decree directing the defendant, if so required, to re-transfer the property and to pay to the plaintiff the amount which may be found due to him: and the plaintiff shall, if necessary, be put in possession of the mortgaged property.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule is new and gives effect to the practice followed in cases arising under the Transfer of Property Act[1] and in cases arising even previous thereto.[2]

If the Court finds that the mortgage has been discharged a decree for redemption can be passed at once without the formality of a preliminary and final decree.[3] A mortgagee who continues in possession of the mortgaged property after the mortgage has been satisfied is liable for all the receipts from the property with interest from the time when the debt was fully paid off.[4] Extra Court-fee in addition to the Court-fee paid on the principal sum due need not be paid on the surplus profits that may be decreed to a mortgagor in a redemption suit.[5] A claim by a mortgagor for recovery of over-payment received by the mortgagee is a relief included in a suit for redemption to which Art. 148 of the Limitation Act applies.[6]

2. Deduction of costs payable to mortgagor.—The mortgagor is entitled to set-off the costs awarded to him against the mortgage money[1] in

But mesne profits accruing after the date fixed for payment under the preliminary decree[2] or after the date of payment under the decree,[3] have been held to be recoverable by a separate suit. O.34, R.10, Notes 1—5.

1. Legislative changes:—

The rule corresponds to S. 94 of the Transfer of Property Act.

2. Amendments after 1908.—The rule was amended by Act, XXI of 1929. The provision as to the payment of "other costs, charges and expenses" is new.

3. Mortgagee is ordinarily entitled to his costs.—In a suit for sale, foreclosure or redemption, the mortgagee is ordinarily entitled to his costs unless his "conduct has been such as to disentitle him thereto".[1] For the scale on which costs are awarded, see the undermentioned cases.[2]

4. "Such costs of suit as have been properly incurred."—The mortgagor's liability in a mortgage suit cannot be enhanced by a final decree beyond the point indicated in the preliminary decree, except in so far as is provided for by the present rule.[1] It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the rule refers only to costs incurred between the preliminary decree and the final decree and not to the costs incurred subsequent to the final decree, in execution proceedings.[2] The Chief Court of Oudh, on the other hand, has dissented from this view and held that the rule applies to all costs incurred in connection with the suit up to the time of actual payment whether before or after the final decree.[3] It is submitted that the Oudh view accords more with the language of the rule, than the Allahabad view.

5. Costs of appeal.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether the costs of an unsuccessful appeal by the mortgagor from the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit can be added to the mortgage money or should be recovered from the mortgagor personally. In some cases, it has been held that such costs can be added to the mortgage money.[1] while, in other cases, that the rule refers primarily to costs incurred in the Court which prepares the final decree and that therefore the costs of appeal cannot be added to the mortgage money but should be recovered personally from the mortgagor.[2] According to the undermentioned cases,[3] however, the question is one of construction of the appellate decree dismissing the appeal.

6. "Other costs, charges and expenses."—This expression has been newly inserted by Act, XXI of 1929 and gives effect to the practice followed before the Act, of adding such "costs, charges and expenses", incurred after the preliminary decree, to the mortgage money.[1]

8. Costs awarded by decree, mode of realisation.—Prima facie, the costs awarded in a mortgage suit, against the mortgagor, should be added to the mortgage money and the mortgagor is not personally liable for them except when a decree can be passed against him under R. 6 ante.[1] But under S. 35 of the Code, the Court has the power to make the mortgagor personally liable for the costs even in the first instance, in which case, the mortgagor would be personally liable for the costs.[2]

Synopsis.

1. Amendments after 1908.
2. Interest in mortgage suits.
3. Rule of damdupet.

1. Amendments after 1908.—The present rule is new. It was substituted for the old R. 11 which was repealed by Act, XXI of 1929 and re-enacted as S 94 of the Transfer of Property Act. Prior to Act, XXI of 1929 there was no special statutory provision regarding interest in mortgage suits corresponding to the present rule.

2. Interest in mortgage suits.—This rule which was inserted in the Code by Act, XXI of 1929 gives effect to the previous case-law bearing on the subject. This case-law may be summarised as follows:—

Interest prior to the suit.—Interest could not be claimed in every case as a matter of course. No interest was recoverable unless there was an express or implied agreement to pay interest[1] or unless it was recoverable under mercantile usage or under some statutory provision, such as the Interest Act, 1839, (See Notes under S. 34.) Where there was an agreement to pay interest, the Court should decree it at the agreed rate, however high it might be,[2] unless it was penal,[3] or the rate of interest was excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair, see Usurious Loans Act, 1918), in either of which cases, the Court might decree what it considered a reasonable rate of interest.[3-a] A stipulation for the payment of compound interest was held to be not necessarily penal.[4] Nor did the mere fact that the rate of interest was excessive give rise to a presumption of undue influence where it was not proved that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the debtor.[5] The interest decreed was a charge on the mortgaged property.[6]

Where the mortgagee was in possession of the mortgaged property, the income from the property should be applied in discharge of the interest payable to him.[7] But a mortgagee who was entitled to possession in lieu of interest could not claim any interest for the period for which he failed to obtain possession on account of his own laches.[8]

The present rule and S. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act make it clear that interest is payable on the "costs and charges and expenses" properly incurred by the mortgagee in respect of the mortgage security.[8-a]

Post diem interest or interest after the date fixed in the mortgage deed for the payment of the mortgage money.—There was a conflict of decisions as to the power of the Court to decree interest after the due date for payment under the mortgage deed. In some cases it was held that, in the absence of any specific stipulation for the payment of such interest, it could not be decreed.[9] But in a great many cases it was held that an intention to pay interest subsequent to the period fixed for redemption at the same rate as before might be implied in the absence of any agreement to the contrary.[10] Even if there was no intention to pay such interest, the Court could award it by way of damages for the breach of the contract to pay the mortgage money at the stipulated time.[11]

The contract rate of interest was ordinarily taken as the measure of damages,[12] though the Court could vary it if it considered it necessary.[13]

Post diem interest at a reasonable rate might also be decreed under the Interest Act of 1839 though there might be no agreement to pay such interest.[14] Such interest awarded either as damages,[15] or under the Interest Act,[16] was held not to constitute a charge on the mortgaged property though a contrary view also was held in the undermentioned cases.[17] It was also held that post diem interest claimed as damages for breach of contract could be recovered only for the period prescribed by the Limitation Act for a suit for compensation for such breach[18], and that a claim for such damages would fail unless the mortgage suit was brought within the period of limitation for a suit for damages for breach of the contract.[19] But the Privy Council observed in the undermentioned case that the claim was a recurring one and so long as the principal itself was not barred, post diem interest could be recovered for the six years (or three years, as the case may be), preceding the suit on the mortgage.[20]

the decretal amount before the date fixed in the decree for payment he was bound to pay interest for the entire period fixed.[23]

Interest from date fixed in the decree for payment till realisation.—The Court could decree interest even for the period subsequent to the date fixed for payment in the decree, till realisation.[24] The following cases which held to the contrary[24-a] were obsolete even prior to the enactment of the present rule. The scheme of the Code being that after the date fixed in the decree for payment the relationship between the parties passed from the domain of contract into that of judgment, the Court was not bound to award interest, after such date, at the contract rate, but might award such interest at any rate that it considers reasonable.[25] The undermentioned cases[25-a] which held that the Court was bound to award the contract rate till payment are not good law.

Future interest after the date fixed for payment is to be paid on the aggregate of the principal, interest and costs awarded by the decree.[26] The present rule makes it clear that such future interest forms part of the mortgage money and is not a simple money claim.[27] The proper stage for decreeing future interest is at the time of passing the final decree.[28] Subsequent interest not mentioned in the final decree must be taken as refused.[29] But an agreement between the parties for the payment of future interest may be given effect to though the final decree does not provide for it.[30] When future interest is decreed, it must be paid till the confirmation of the sale.[31] new S. 96 has been inserted in the Transfer of Property Act which deals with a different subject.

2. Sale of property subject to prior mortgage.—The explanation to O. 34, R. 1 makes it clear that the prior mortgagee is not a necessary party to a suit for sale on a puisne mortgage. Hence a puisne mortgagee can bring the mortgaged property to sale under his own decree subject to a prior mortgage.[1] The contrary view, taken in the undermentioned cases decided under the Transfer of Property Act, is obsolete.[2]

As to whether a person having two mortgages on the same property can sue on his puisne mortgage, reserving his rights under the first mortgage. (See Note 40 to S. 11.) He cannot, however, in any case, sell the property twice under his two mortgages.[3] But if the prior mortgage is a usufructuary one and the mortgagee is therefore unable to bring the property to sale under that mortgage, there is nothing to prevent his bringing the property to sale under his later simple mortgage subject to the prior usufructuary mortgage.[4]

3. Sale free of prior mortgage.—The rule clearly implies that without the prior mortgagee's consent, property cannot be sold free of his mortgage, in execution of a decree for sale on a subsequent mortgage.[1] In the absence of such consent, the sale under a decree on a puisne mortgage can only be subject to the prior mortgage though there may be no express reservation of the prior mortgagee's rights.[1-a] Although the prior mortgagee may be joined as a party to the suit on the puisne mortgage, it is not incumbent on him to assert and prove his priority where his mortgage or his priority is not impugned. (See Note 40 to S. 11.) The priority therefore cannot be lost merely because the prior mortgagee does not establish it in such a case.[2] See also the undermentioned case.[3]

4 Where prior mortgage is a usufructuary one.—(a) Sale free of prior mortgage.—A usufructuary mortgagee, as such, cannot sue for sale on his mortgage. There is, therefore, a conflict of opinion as to whether a prior usu-fructuary mortgagee, with whose consent the property is sold under this rule in execution of a decree on a puisne mortgage, is entitled to share in the sale proceeds. The High Court of Madras has held that he can, on the ground that this rule applies to all mortgages whether simple or usufructuary or whether the mortgages are in favour of the same person or different persons.[1] The High Court of Allahabad, on the other hand, has held that he cannot do so.[2] It has, however, held that, where a puisne mortgagee redeems a prior usufructuary mortgagee, he can bring the mortgaged property to sale for the amounts due under both the mortgages.[3]

(b) Sale subject to prior mortgage.—As to sale of mortgaged property subject to a prior usufructuary mortgage, see Note 2, supra.

5. Sale by the Court subject to a charge.—A statement in a certificate of sale that the sale is subject to a charge is not conclusive against the purchaser when it is sought to enforce the charge by a suit.[1] A person who sells property subject to an encumbrance which has been recognised by the Court cannot claim a re-sale on the ground that the encumbrance has been found to be void.[2] Mortgages noted in the proclamation of sale as claimed upon the property sold should not necessarily be entered in the certificate of sale or be computed as part of the purchase-money unless the existence of the mortgage has been either admitted by the parties or established by a decree or declared under O. 21, R. 62.[3] When a sale is subject to encumbrances, the vendor is no longer liable for their satisfaction nor is he entitled to any benefit that the vendee might obtain therefrom.[4]

1. Transfer of Property Act, S. 97.—The present rule corresponds to S. 97 of the Transfer of Property Act.

2. Application of proceeds.—Compare S. 73, ante. R. 13 in terms applies only when the sale is ordered under R. 12, i.e., when the sale is free of the prior mortgage. But the principle of the rule applies to other cases also. Hence, even in sales subject to a prior mortgage, the proceeds should first be applied towards the interest and costs of the mortgage under which the sale is held and then only towards the principal.[1]

Where a sale is held in enforcement of a prior mortgage, a puisne mortgagee receiving an amount from out of the surplus sale proceeds by virtue of his security is bound to apply them only in satisfaction of his mortgage debt though the mortgagor may have paid the money towards other debts.[2]

3. "Whatever is due to the prior mortgagee".—Each of the prior encumbrancers is entitled to interest at the contract rate up to the date of the confirmation of the sale, that being the earliest date when the money really becomes available for distribution.[1]

validity of the subsequent encumbrance is challenged by the mortgagor.[2] A subsequent mortgagee who has obtained a decree on his mortgage but has allowed it to become time barred is not a person interested in the property sold.[3] It was held in the case cited below[4] that the holder of two successive mortgages on the same property, who failed to include the second mortgage in his suit on the first mortgage, could claim the surplus sale proceeds under this rule as a puisne encumbrancer. That position, will, it is conceived, be different in cases governed by S. 67-A of the Transfer of Property Act which has been newly introduced by Act, XX of 1929. A mere unsecured creditor is not a person "interested in the property sold". But after the subsequent encumbrances are satisfied, he can proceed against the balance, if any, payable to the mortgagor.[5]

1. Transfer of Property Act, S. 99.—This rule corresponds to S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, with this difference, viz.,—that while S. 99 applied even to cases in which the mortgagee had obtained a money decree on a claim unconnected with the mortgage, R. 14 is expressly confined to cases where a money decree has been obtained on a claim arising under the mortgage. See Note 11, below.

2. Scope and object of the rule.—As has been seen in Note 19 to R. 5, ante, a sale in execution of a decree on a mortgage passes the interests of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee, while a sale in execution of a money decree conveys only the interest of the mortgagor namely, the equity of redemption. The object of the present rule is to prevent the mortgagee from bringing to sale the bare equity of redemption in execution of a money decree which he may obtain in respect of a claim arising under the mortgage. Thus where a mortgagee obtains a simple money decree for the interest that has accrued due on the mortgage, or obtains a money decree for the mortgage debt under S. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, he cannot attach and sell the mortgaged properties in execution of the said decree though he can proceed against the person or other properties of the mortgagor. If he wants to proceed against the mortgaged properties he is bound to bring a suit for sale again, and such a suit will not be barred by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2.

The reason of the rule is the avoidance of several evils which are likely to result if a mortgagee is allowed to bring the mortgaged properties to sale in execution of a money decree which he has obtained on a claim arising under the mortgage.[1] Such a sale would deprive the mortgagor summarily of the right of redemption without giving him any of the facilities which an ordinary suit for sale ensures. Being subject to the unascertained claim of the mortgagee the property would not fetch a fair value at the sale and the mortgagee would be enabled to purchase it at an unduly low price. If a stranger purchased it at the sale without notice of the mortgage he would be subjected to great hardship unless the mortgagee could be held to be estopped from asserting his rights under the mortgage against such a purchaser.[2]

The rule is retrospective in effect being a rule of procedure, and applies to decrees passed even prior to its coming into force.[3]

The rule does not apply to Punjab, the Transfer of Property Act not having been extended thereto.[4] See sub-R. 2. See also the undermentioned cases.[5]

Under S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was held that it applied to Civil Courts and Revenue Courts.[6] It was also held that the section applied to mortgages created before the Transfer of Property Act,[7] but not to judicial sales held and perfected before the date of the Act.[8]

The rule prevents only a sale of the mortgaged property under a money decree in respect of a claim arising under the mortgage. It does not prevent the attachment of the mortgaged property under such a decree. See Note 8, infra.

3. Applicability of the rule to enforcement of a charge.—By force of R. 15, infra this rule applies to charges as well as mortgages.[1] It applies, however, only to a charge which exists prior to the decree for money and not one which is created for the first time by the decree as in the latter case the decree cannot be said to be obtained in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. (See Note 6, infra.) In such a case, therefore, the charge can be enforced in execution without any fresh suit for sale being filed.[2]

Thus where, in a suit for maintenance, by a Hindu widow, the maintenance decreed is made a charge on certain property, the widow can enforce the charge by applying for sale of the property in execution and cannot be compelled to file a suit for sale.[3]

4. Applicability of the rule to the enforcement of security bonds.—Under S. 145 of the Code, the liability of a surety for a judgment-debtor can be enforced summarily in execution proceedings, in so far as the surety has made himself personally liable. But, suppose, besides making himself personally liable, he mortgages some property as security, can the property be sold in execution without a suit for sale? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[1] Bombay,[2] Madras[3] and Patna[4] that this rule does not apply to such a case as there is no decree for money against the surety within the meaning of the rule. But the High Court of Calcutta[5] has held that the rule applies and is an absolute bar to the sale of the mortgaged property without a regular suit for sale.

Where the security bond is given to the Court and not to any named person, there is no mortgage, the Court not being a juridical person and the proper procedure to enforce the security is by a summary order for the sale of the property covered by the bond, unless the surety pays the amount of security within a specified date.[6]

6. "Decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage".—S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, applied though the claim on which the money decree was obtained was totally unconnected with the mortgage. The present rule applies only to cases in which a money decree is obtained on a claim arising under the mortgage.[1] (For further information on this aspect of the subject see Note 11, infra.)

It follows from the language of the rule that the mortgage should be one existing prior to the decree and not one created by the decree itself (See Note 3, supra).[2] The rule also presupposes that the mortgage is valid and enforceable at the time of the passing of the money decree. If the mortgage is invalid or has become unenforceable through the efflux of time or any other reason, the rule does not apply and is no bar to the sale of the property under the money decree.[3]

7. Effect of sale in contravention of the rule.—A sale in contravention of the rule can be prevented by objection being taken at any time before the sale takes place.[1] But if it does actually take place, it is not void but is only voidable at the instance of the mortgagor or of any other person having an interest in the equity of redemption.[2] The contrary view held in the undermentioned cases[3] cannot be considered to be good law. The proper remedy to set aside a sale held in contravention of the rule is by an application under S. 47 of the Code and not by a separate suit.[4] The application should be made before the confirmation of the sale. After the sale has been confirmed it cannot be set aside unless owing to fraud or other reasons the mortgagor was kept in ignorance of the sale proceedings prior to the sale.[5] Where the sale is held after due notice to the judgment-debtor he cannot subsequently question its validity.[6]

Once the sale is confirmed, the purchaser gets a good title to the property and is not liable to be redeemed subsequently by the mortgagor.[7] The fact that the mortgagee himself has purchased the property with the leave of the Court makes no difference.[8] In the undermentioned cases, however, it was held that if the mortgagee himself is the purchaser, the mortgagor's right of redemption is not affected.[9] It is submitted that the latter view is not correct for two reasons:—

(1) S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, recognises the possibility of the extinguishment of the equity of redemption by its becoming vested in the mortgagee and,

(2) a decree-holder who buys with the leave of the Court is in the same position as any other purchaser.

O.34, R.14, Notes 7--10.

S. 47 and O. 21, R. 92 do not apply to persons who are not parties to the sale proceedings and therefore such persons can object to the sale by a separate suit even subsequent to its confirmation.[10]

A sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree is subject to the encumbrances covering the property at the time in as much as only the mortgagor's interest passes at such a sale.[11] (Compare the under-mentioned cases,[12] decided prior to the Transfer of Property Act, in which it was held that the mortgagee's interest also passed at such a sale.)

But a mortgagee decree-holder who, while bringing the mortgaged property to sale under a money decree, fails to disclose his mortgage is estopped from asserting his rights under the mortgage against an innocent auction-purchaser.[13]

An application for sale made in contravention of R. 14 is not one in accordance with the law within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act.[14]

8. Position of purchaser at such sale.—See Note 7, supra.

9. Attachment of the property is not prohibited.—The rule prohibits only the sale of the mortgaged property under a money decree for the mortgage debt. The rule does not preclude the mere attachment of the property in execution of such a decree.[1]

10. Transferee of money decree from mortgagee if bound by the restrictions against the mortgagee.—Under S. 49 of the Code a transferee of a decree in respect of a claim arising under the mortgage, holds it subject to the equities which the judgment-debtor might have enforced against the decree-holder. Hence, the transferee of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee is bound by the restrictions imposed by this rule against the mortgagee.[1]

The transferee of a money decree, not in respect of the mortgage, obtained by the mortgagee against his mortgagor, is not barred, under this rule, from selling the judgment-debtor's equity of redemption.[2] See Note 11, infra.

O.34, R.14, Note 11.

11. "Otherwise than by instituting a suit".—As has been seen in Note 2, ante the effect of this rule is that where a mortgagee has obtained a simple money decree on his mortgage, he cannot bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of such decree but must file a separate suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage and such a suit would not be barred despite the provisions of O. 2, R. 2.[1] A decree in a suit on the mortgage bond, which does not provide for the sale of the mortgaged property, is only a simple money decree though it may declare the existence of a lien on the property covered by the bond.[2] On the other hand, a decree on a mortgage bond which, though not drawn up in the form prescribed for a decree for sale, yet provides for the sale of the property in case of default by the mortgagor, is not a simple money decree and R. 14 is no bar to the sale of the mortgaged property in execution thereof.[3]

The rule applies also to usufructuary mortgages. When the mortgagee has obtained a money decree for the mortgage amount in such a case, he cannot bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree. He must bring a suit for sale for that purpose. He can bring such a suit though, if he had not obtained a money decree for the mortgage amount, he could not have done so, on account of the mortgage being a usufructuary one.[4]

Where a mortgagee has given up all his rights under the mortgage the rule is no bar to the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree for the mortgage debt.[5] (See Note 6, supra, foot-note 3.)

O.34, R.14, Notes 11—12.

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the rule does not apply to a suit for contribution brought by a co-mortgagor who has redeemed the entire mortgage and claims a charge on the shares of the other co-sharers for the proportionate amounts due by them. The reason given is that such a suit is not mere suit for money but a development of the suit on the mortgage.[6]

Under O. 33, R. 13 and S. 47 the charge which the Government has on the subject-matter of the suit for the Court-fee payable in cases where the plaintiff has been allowed to sue as a pauper is enforceable by proceedings in execution and not by separate suit.[7]

12. Sale of mortgaged property for claim unconnected with the mortgage.—S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, prohibited a sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee although the decree was upon a claim unconnected with the mortgage.[1] The present rule applies only if the decree for money is in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage and not to a decree on a claim unconnected with the mortgage.[2] A fortiori there is no bar to the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree obtained by a third person or to the mortgagee purchasing the property at such a sale.[3] Even S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act was no bar to such a sale or purchase.[4]

The following are cases showing what are and what are not "claims arising under the mortgage":—

(1) Where a usufructuary mortgagee grants a lease of the property to the mortgagor, a claim for rent accruing under the lease is not a claim arising under the mortgage,[5] unless the lease formed part of the mortgage transaction.[6]

(2) Where a mortgagee holds two distinct mortgages on two different properties of the same mortgagor, he can bring to sale one of the properties in execution of a money decree which he has obtained on the mortgage of the other property.[7]

(3) A claim for costs awarded to a usufructuary mortgagee in a suit for possession against the mortgagor is not a claim arising under the mortgage but one arising by virtue of the decree made by the Court in the suit for possession.[8]

(4) Subsequent to a usufructuary mortgage of the right to receive certain offerings at a temple, the parties agreed between themselves that the mortgagor should pay to the mortgagee a certain sum of money annually in lieu of the offerings; a decree was then obtained by the mortgagee, on the basis of this agreement, for the arrears of the annual payments, and it was held that the annual payments formed an essential part of the mortgage money and that hence the decree came within the mischief of R. 14.[9]

(5) A mortgagee who has obtained, a mortgage decree, as well as a money decree on an independent claim, can sell the property for the consolidated sum and realise, from the sale proceeds, the amount of a decree he has for the mortgage debt.[10]

13. O. 2, R. 2.—This rule expressly provides that O. 2, R. 2 shall not be a bar to a second suit for sale on a mortgage when the mortgagee has merely obtained a money decree on his mortgage, under which he cannot bring the mortgaged property to sale, by virtue of this rule.[1] (There was a conflict of decisions on this question prior to the Transfer of Property Act. See the undermentioned cases.[2]

Even after the execution of the decree for money has become time-barred, the mortgagee can sue for sale under this rule.[3]

If, however, the prior decree was a decree providing for sale of the mortgaged property though not strictly drawn up in the form prescribed for a decree for sale, this rule does not apply and a second suit for sale is barred by res judicata.[4] (See Note 11, supra, foot-notes 2 and 3.) Similarly, if the mortgagee sues for sale but is content to take only a simple money decree he cannot subsequently sue again for sale. Such a suit will also be barred by res judicata. The exemption in this rule is only from O. 2, R. 2 and not from S. 11.[5]

Further this rule relieves the mortgagee only from the restrictions imposed by O. 2, R. 2 on the splitting of remedies. The restriction as to splitting of claims is not affected by it.[6] Thus a suit for interest alone brought at a time when the principal also had become due is a bar to a subsequent suit for the principal.[7]

14. Consent decree.—This rule does not apply to cases in which a decree for money is passed against the mortgagor by consent. The reason is that the benefit under the rule is intended only for the mortgagor, and so he can waive it by consenting to a money decree being passed for the mortgage amount.[1]

15. "Decree".—An order directing a surety for a judgment-debtor to pay the amount secured is not a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this rule, and, hence, the rule does not preclude the sale of the property covered by the security bond, by proceedings in execution without a suit for sale being filed.[1] (See Note 4, supra.) Although a decree providing for the sale of the equity of redemption for arrears of interest due under the mortgage is contrary to the provisions of S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, it cannot be objected to in execution.[2] (See Note 7, supra.)

Charge distinguished from mortgage. See Note 3, Pts. (1) and (2).

Decree for charge final by itself—No fresh final decree needed. See Note 2, Pt. (2).

1. Amendments after 1908.—The rule has been substituted for old R. 15 by the Transfer of Property Act (Amendment) Supplementary Act, XXI of 1929. The main changes effected in the rule are:

(1) The words "which apply to a simple mortgage" have been substituted for the words "as to the sale or redemption of the mortgaged property."

(2) The words "mortgage by deposit of title-deeds within the meaning of S. 58" are new.

2. Scope of the rule.—By force of this rule O. 34, R. 6 applies also to suits to enforce charges.[1] The rule makes the provisions of the Code apply only so far as may be. Hence, where a charge is declared by a decree, which in its terms is final, no fresh final decree is necessary.[2]

3. Charge.—A charge is defined in S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act as follows:—

> "Where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property''.

The distinction between a simple mortgage and a charge is often a question of great nicety but there is a well-marked distinction between the two, viz., that a mortgage does, and a charge does not, involve a transfer of an interest in immoveable property.[1] The Transfer of Property Act, S. 100, now makes it clear that a charge is not enforceable against a bona fide transferee of the property for value without notice, while a mortgage is so enforceable.[2] A document purporting to create a charge in future in the event of non-payment of the debt does not create any charge within S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act.[3] That section also says that all the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act applicable to simple mortgages, apply also to charges. As to limitation for suits to enforce charges, see the undermentioned cases.[4]

4. Creation of charge by operation of law.—According to S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, a charge may be created by operation of law or by act of parties. Thus, under S. 55 of that Act the vendor of immoveable property has a charge on it for the unpaid purchase money.[1] A puisne mortgagee who is impleaded as a party to a suit by a prior mortgagee to enforce his mortgage is entitled to a charge on the surplus sale proceeds of the property remaining after satisfaction of the prior mortgage.[2] Under S. 95 of that Act one of several co-mortgagors who redeems the whole mortgage is entitled to a charge on the shares of the other co-mortgagors for their respective portions of the mortgage debt.[3] (Under the Section as amended by Act, XX of 1929 the redeeming co-mortgagor is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.) It has been held by the Madras High Court[4] that where one of several co-sharers of property pays the entire Government revenue due on the land, in order to prevent its sale for arrears of revenue, he is entitled to a charge on the shares of the others, for their respective portions of the amount due. But the Calcutta High Court has taken a different view.[5] See also the undermentioned case.[6]

5. Creation of charge by act of parties.—No formal words are necessary to create a charge, if the intention to do so is clear from the document read as a whole.[1] Thus where a Hindu executed a document agreeing to pay to his sister and after her death to her daughter Rs. 10 per mensem from the produce of an estate, held that a charge was created on the profits of the estate for the payment of the amount.[2] A charge may be created for religious purposes and in such cases the property descends to the heirs or other representatives of the donor subject to the charge for the purposes mentioned.[3] Similarly a testator may make a charge on his properties for the payment of his debts.[4]

6. Charge under Rent Act.—A charge for the payment of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act[1] or the Madras Estates Land Act[2] is not such a charge as is covered by S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act.

7. Priority between rent decree and mortgage decree.—It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that a purchaser in execution of a rent decree has priority over the purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree.[1] But according to the High Court of Madras a sale for arrears of rent unlike a sale for arrears of revenue is not free of prior encumbrances.[2] Even where property is sold for arrears of Government revenue if the property is purchased by the mortgagor himself the mortgagee is entitled to have the property sold for the satisfaction of his mortgage debt. This is on the principle that a mortgagor cannot set up against a mortgagee an incumbrance created by himself.[3]

8. Invalid mortgage if creates a charge.—An instrument which is intended to create a mortgage but which is invalid and fails to take effect as it does not fulfil the requirements of the law does not create a charge.[1]

9. Right of maintenance.—A right to maintenance is not a charge on the property out of which the maintenance is payable. But the right may be made a charge by act of parties or by a decree of Court.[1] As to the procedure for recovering maintenance charged on property by a decree of Court, see Notes under R. 14, supra.

10. Claim for dower.—A claim for dower by a Muhammadan widow is not a charge on the estate in the hands of the heirs of the deceased husband but only ranks with ordinary debts.[1] But her decree for dower is entitled to priority over a decree against the heir for the latter's personal debt.[2]

11. Mortgage by deposit of title-deeds.—See Transfer of Property Act, Ss. 58 and 96. S. 96 makes the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as to simple mortgages applicable to mortgages by deposit of title-deeds. Similarly, the present rule makes the provisions of O. 34, which are applicable to simple mortgages, applicable also to mortgages by deposit of titlle-deeds.

12. Charges enforceable by sale.—As the remedy of a simple mortgagee is only to sue for sale of the mortgaged property, so the charge holder's remedy is also to sue for sale. But if the sale proceeds of the property charged are not sufficient to satisfy the charge and if the balance is legally recoverable from the debtor's other properties or from him personally, then a personal decree may be obtained under R. 6, supra. See Note 2, foot-note 1, supra.

13. Charge on the surplus sale proceeds of sale for arrears of revenue or rent.—Under S. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, where the mortgaged property is sold for arrears of revenue or rent, the mortgage charge is transferred to the surplus sale proceeds and the mortgagee is entitled to have his mortgage debt satisfied out of such proceeds in preference to other creditors of the mortgagor.[1] But if the sale was due to the mortgagee's own default he is not entitled to sue for his mortgage money.[2]

Payment of thing claimed into Court.

R. 2. [S. 472.] Where the thing claimed is capable of being paid into Court or placed in the custody of the Court, the plaintiff may be required to so pay or place it before he can be entitled to any order in the suit.

[1877—S. 472.]

Synopsis.

1. "May be required to so pay or place it."
2. Payment to one of the contestants on security.

1. "May be required to so pay or place it."—Where the subject-matter of the dispute is a chose in action its disposition as the Court may direct is a sufficient compliance with the rule.[1] The Court has a discretion to make such orders as regards the subject-matter in dispute and the party is bound to obey the order before he can ask for any relief in the suit. This is a further condition that will be imposed upon the party to test his bona fides or disinterestedness. If he is not ready to pay or deliver the property to one of the defendants but disputes his title, the suit is not an interpleader suit.[2] But if the plaintiff complies with the order of the Court he is fully discharged from liability. Thus where the plaintiff pays the amount in dispute into Court for payment to the right person, but the Court pays it to the wrong person the plaintiff cannot be made responsible for the mistake of the Court but is fully discharged from liability.[3]

2. Payment to one of the contestants on security.—The money paid into Court cannot be handed over to one of the parties pending the suit even on security after the original plaintiff is discharged and one of the rival defendants to the interpleader suit, is made a plaintiff. It must be kept under the control of the Court available for payment at any time to the successful party.[1]

Procedure where defendant is suing plaintiff.

R. 3. [S. 476.] Where any of the defendants in an interpleader suit is actually suing the plaintiff in respect of the subject-matter of such suit, the Court in which the suit against the plaintiff is pending shall, on being informed by the Court in which the interpleader suit has been instituted, stay the proceedings as against him; and his costs in the suit so stayed may be provided for in such suit; but if, and in so far as, they are not provided for in that suit, they may be added to his costs incurred in the interpleader suit.

Synopsis.

2. Appeal.

1. Legislative changes.—

Under the old Code proceedings in another suit by the defendant against the plaintiff could be stayed only after a decree in the interpleader suit. Under the present rule, such proceedings could be stayed even on the institution of the interpleader suit.[1]

2. Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule. See O. 43, R. 1 (p).

O. 35, R.4.

Procedure at first hearing.

R. 4. [S. 473.] (1) At the first hearing the Court may—

(a) declare that the plaintiff is discharged from all liability to the defendants in respect of the thing claimed, award him his costs, and dismiss him from the suit; or

(b) if it thinks that justice or convenience so require, retain all parties until the final disposal of the suit.

(2) Where the Court finds that the admissions of the parties or other evidence enable it to do so, it may adjudicate the title to the thing claimed.

(3) Where the admissions of the parties do not enable the Court so to adjudicate, it may direct—

(a) that an issue or issues between the parties be framed and tried, and

(b) that any claimant be made a plaintiff in lieu of or in addition to the original plaintiff, and shall proceed to try the suit in the ordinary manner.

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes.
2. Non-appearance of claimants.
3. Appeal.
4. Court-fee.

1. Legislative changes.—

Sub-S. (3) is new. It has been adopted from the English rule of the Supreme Court, O. 57, R. 7, and substituted for Cl. (d) of the old S. 473. The change expressly authorises a Court to make one of the claimants a plaintiff in lieu of, or in addition to the original plaintiff.

The question whether a party to an interpleader issue shall be treated as plaintiff or defendant must be decided by the real merits of the case and not by the mere form of the issue itself.[1] As to the power of a Court to add a party claiming to be interested in an interpleader suit upon his own application, see the undermentioned case.[2]

2. Non-appearance of claimants.—On the non-appearance of claimants in a properly instituted interpleader suit the proper course for the Court is laid down under sub-R. (1). It is competent to the Court—

(1) to discharge the plaintiff from all liability to the claimants-defendants in respect of the subject-matter in dispute and dismiss him from the suit,

(2) to direct the plaintiff to pay the amount into Court to the credit of the proper claimant after deducting his costs,

(3) to direct the claimants-defendants to apply for payment and when they appear make one of them a plaintiff and raise an issue, and,

(4) to restrain by injunction either defendant in a proper case from taking any proceeding against the plaintiff.[1]

3. Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule. See O. 43, R. 1, Cl. (p). An order dismissing the interpleader suit itself[1] or an adjudication upon the claims of the defendants in the interpleader suit[2] will however be a decree and appealable as such under S. 96 of the Code.

4. Court-fee.—A memorandum of appeal from an order under this rule is chargeable with a Court-fee of one rupee under Art. 11, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870.

A suit, or a memorandum of appeal against a decree declaring the right of one defendant as against another to the money held by the plaintiff, is chargeable with Court-fees under Art. 17 of Sch. II and not under S. 7, Cl. (iv), (c) of the Court-Fees Act, VII of 1870.[1]

Agents and tenants may not institute interpleader suits.

R. 5. [S. 474.] Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to enable agents to sue their principals, or tenants to sue their landlords, for the purpose of compelling them to interplead with any persons other than persons making claim through such principals or landlords.

Appeal. See Note 3, F.-N. (3).

1. Interpleader suits by agents.—This rule declares a prohibition and its concluding part provides an exception. The reason for the rule seems to be that an agent cannot ordinarily dispute the title of his principal. The illustrations to the rule explain the rule so far as the agent is concerned. In illustration (a) C claims adversely to A but not through A, whereas in Illustration (b), C claims through A. As to the definition of agent and principal see S. 182 of the Indian Contract Act.

2. Interpleader suits by Railway Company.—A Railway Company by accepting goods for carriage does not become the agent of the consignor. It merely enters into an independent contract with the consignor. It can therefore file an interpleader suit against the consignor and another party claiming adversely to the consignor.[1]

3. Interpleader suits by tenants.—The prohibition that a tenant cannot file an interpleader proceeding against his landlord is based on the principle that he cannot dispute the title of his landlord during the subsistence of the tenancy.[1-a] A tenant cannot therefore bring a suit against his landlord for the purpose of compelling him to interplead with any person other than a person making claim through such landlord.[1] Thus where a tenant passed two Kabuliats in favour of two persons in respect of the same land and then being threatened by suits by both of them, instituted a suit praying "that

Where a mortgagee does not deny an assignment by him of his rights under the bond to X but only contends that it is a voidable one, the mortgagor may treat the assignee as entitled to the money and is not bound to bring an interpleader suit compelling the mortgagee and X to interplead with each other.[4]

Synopsis.

1. Special case.

"Agreement in writing." See Note 1, Pt. (1).

1. Special case.—This order lays down the rules of procedure in respect of the statement of special case, its hearing, and other matters connected therewith and generally referred to in S. 90 of the Code. Rr. 1 and 2 prescribe the form and contents of an agreement to state a case. So far as possible, facts should be stated in a chronological order and in the form of a narrative. Material documents should be referred to, and their effect or contents stated. The statement must conclude with a formulation of the question to be decided by the Court and must be signed by the parties and their counsel, if any.[1] Where the agreement is duly entered into and filed in the Court having jurisdiction, the proceeding will be registered as a suit and heard and disposed of as such. See Rr. 2 to 5.

Rule 5 enacts that the Court hearing a special case must be satisfied on three points:—

1. That the parties have a bona fide interest in the question stated.—The right to state a case for the opinion of the Court is not, therefore, intended to enable parties to refer to the Court any hypothetical questions or matters of mere academic interest involving no substantial interest to the parties.[2]

O. 36, R.1, Note 1.

2. That the agreement was duly executed by the parties.—The Court will not, therefore, interfere in a case where the parties have not provided in the agreement for an undertaking for payment of money, delivery of property, or the doing or the refraining from doing of any particular act in the event of a finding by the Court as required by R. 1.[3]

3. That the case is fit to be decided.—A case is not fit to be decided unless the successful party will be able either to execute the decree or to base a suit upon the decree passed in it.[3-a] Where there are special tribunals to try the question between the parties, as for example, a question relating to the adequate provision by a municipal corporation for the supply of water and for the protection against fire as regards an estate owned by a Port Trust, a special case cannot be stated for the opinion of the Court. Nor will a mere declaration of the rights involved in such a case be a fit point for a special case.[4] So also, a question which the Court is not competent to decide in an ordinary suit cannot be stated as special case.[5]

For instances of questions that can be stated as a special case see the undermentioned cases.[6]

As to the re-opening of a decided special case, see S. 90, Note 2 and the undermentioned cases.[7]

The provisions of this Order govern the procedure in regard to any dispute between two or more Government Wards referred to a Court for decision. See the Bombay Court of Wards Act (I of 1905). These provisions do not apply to proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926). See Sch. II, List I of the Act.

R. 2. [S. 528.] Where the agreement is for the delivery of any property, or for the doing, or the refraining from doing, any particular act, the estimated value of the property to be delivered, or to which the act specified has reference, shall be stated in the agreement.

2. The words "the Court of the Judge of Karachi" which occurred in Cl. (d) of the old section have been omitted and the words "The Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind" have been newly added as Cl. (c) to the present rule.

3. Cl. (e) and the last three paragraphs of the old section have been omitted and the present Cl. (d) newly added.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—The provisions of this order are merely rules of procedure to be applied after the plaint is admitted. They do not alter in any way the nature of the suit or the jurisdiction of Courts.[1] Consequently, suits can only be filed in the Courts which have jurisdiction to try them.[1-a] If they do not happen to be Courts to which the provisions of this order have been applied under Cl. (d) of this rule, the suit will have to be tried in the ordinary manner.[2]

Section 192, Cl. (a) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908 excludes the applicability of this order to suits, appeals and other proceedings under that Act.

3. Courts of Small Causes.—By virtue of O. 51, infra this order will not apply to Presidency Small Cause Courts save as otherwise provided by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, XV of 1882. Under S. 9 of the latter Act, the High Court, may from time to time prescribe the procedure to be followed by the Small Cause Court and may, therefore, extend the rules of this order also to such Courts. As regards the Provincial Small Cause Courts, S. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887 read with O. 50 of this Code makes it clear that this order will apply to such Courts if the conditions mentioned in this rule are satisfied. In other words, if a Provincial Small Cause Court is a Court coming within Cl. (d) of this rule, it can follow the procedure provided by this order, but not otherwise.

Where a Small Cause Court has exclusive jurisdiction in a suit, the fact that the Court has no power under this order to try it summarily will not enable the suit being filed in some other Court which has such power. The only proper course is to file the suit in the ordinary way in that Small Cause Court.[1]

A Subordinate Judge who is presiding over an ordinary Sub-Court but who is exercising Small Cause powers, cannot at that time be taken to be exercising his original jurisdiction and cannot, therefore, try suits summarily on the ground of his being a Subordinate Judge.[2]

Institution of summary suits upon bills of exchange, etc.

R. 2. [S. 532.] (1) All suits upon bills of exchange, hundies or promissory notes may, in case the plaintiff desires to proceed hereunder, be instituted by presenting a plaint in the form prescribed; but the summons shall be in Form No. 4 in Appendix B or in such other form as may be from time to time prescribed.

(2) In any case in which the plaint and summons are in such forms, respectively the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a Judge as hereinafter provided so to appear and defend; and, in default of his obtaining such leave or of his appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree.

(a) for the principal sum due on the instrument and for interest calculated in accordance with the provisions of section 79 or section 80, as the case may be, of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, up to the date of the institution of the suit, or for the sum mentioned in the summons, whichever is less, and for interest up-to-date of the decree at the same rate or at such other rate as the Court thinks fit; and

(b) for such subsequent interest, if any, as the Court may order under section 34 of this Code; and

(c) for such sum for costs as may be prescribed:

Provided that, if the plaintiff claims more than such fixed sum for costs, the costs shall be ascertained in the ordinary way.

(3) A decree passed under this rule may be executed forthwith.

In sub-R. (1) of R. 2 of O. 37, after the words "promissory notes" the following words shall be inserted, namely:—

> "and all suits in which the plaintiff seeks only to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant with or without interest, arising on a contract express or implied, or on an enactment where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money or in the nature of a debt other than a penalty, or on a guarantee, where the claim against the principal is in respect of a debt or a liquidated demand only."

RANGOON.

In O. 37, R. 2, sub-R. (2) the following shall be inserted after the words "pursuance thereof":—"Or of his applying for such leave within ten days from the service of the summons on him and on proof that the summons was duly served on him more than ten days before".

2. Summary suits and ordinary suits.

Scope and object. See Note 2.

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "In any Court to which this section applies" and the words "High Court" which occurred in the first paragraph of S. 532 of the old Code have been omitted.

2. The words "The allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to have been admitted" have been newly added in substitution of the explanation annexed to the old section; and the words "by a Rule of the High Court" which occurred in the old section have been omitted.

3. The provision for immediate execution of decree at the end of the second paragraph of S. 532 has been incorporated in sub-R. (3) with the word "executed" substituted for the word "enforced".

4. The third paragraph of the old section has been omitted.

2. Summary Suits and Ordinary Suits.—The rule is only an enabling provision. A plaintiff wishing to enforce a bill of exchange, a hundi or a promissory note, may, at his option, bring a summary suit under this order, or a suit under the ordinary procedure. A summary suit, however, can only be brought in the Courts mentioned in R. 1 and within one year from the date when the debt becomes due.[1] But the corresponding advantage to the plaintiff choosing this procedure is that the defendant is not entitled as of right to be heard in defence. He must apply for leave within 10 days of the service of summons upon him[2] and if he does not apply for such leave or if the leave is refused, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree.

Order 37, Rule 2—Note 2.

[1] Art 5 of Sec I of the Limitation Act as amended by Act, XXX of 1925.

[2] Art 159 of Sch I of the Limitation Act.

O. 37, R.2, Notes 2—5.

Suits under the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) are not governed by this order. See S. 192-A of the Act.

3. Form of summons in summary suit.—See Form No. 4 of Appendix B, infra. Where the High Court of Madras framed rules under S. 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, XV of 1882 prescribing the form of summons in summary suits under that Act, it was held that the fixing of 3 days thereon as the time within which the defendant should apply for leave to defend, was unreasonable and ultra vires.[1]

The summons under this rule should be served in the same manner as is provided for the service of ordinary summons under O. 5.[2]

4. Limitation for summary suits.—Art. 5 of the Limitation Act, 1877 prescribed a period of 6 months for suits on negotiable instruments instituted under Chapter 39 of the Old Code (corresponding to O. 37). There was no specific provision for other summary suits such as those specified in S. 128 of this Code. When this latter section was newly introduced in the present Code in 1908, Art. 5 was also amended by the Limitation Act of 1908 by providing a period of 6 months for suits "under the summary procedure referred to in S. 128 (2) (f) of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908." The intention of the Legislature obviously being to provide for all summary suits under the Code. It was, however, held by the High Court of Calcutta in the undermentioned case[1] that the words "summary procedure referred to in S. 128 (2) (f) of the Code of Civil Procedure" did not include suits under O. 37. Art. 5 has, in view of this, been again amended by Act, XXX of 1925, so as to include suits under this order. The period of 6 months has also been increased to one year. At present, therefore, a summary suit whether under this order or under S. 128 of the Code should be filed within one year from the date when the debt becomes payable or when the property becomes recoverable.[2]

5. "Unless he obtains leave".—A defendant who has obtained no leave to defend the suit under this rule, cannot be allowed to appear at or participate in the trial of the suit. Thus he cannot appear at the hearing and ask the Court to make the decree amount payable in instalments.[1] Where, in a summary suit against a firm under O. 30 of the Code, a partner enters appearance, he should obtain leave to defend as required by this rule.[2] Before granting a decree under this rule the Court should be satisfied that the defendant has had full opportunity to obtain leave to defend.[3]

6. "Allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted".—This clause is new and has been substituted for the explanation contained in the old section. It embodies an exception to the fundamental principle that a plaintiff must prove the case with which he comes to Court and dispenses with such proof in view of the special nature of the documents mentioned in the rule.[1]

The effect of this provision is that in the special class of suits under consideration, where leave is not applied for or is applied for and refused, the plaintiff gets a decree without adducing any evidence, but on mere proof of service of summons.[2]

7. Limitation for application for leave to defend.—An application for leave to defend should be made within 10 days of the date of service of summons on the defendant.[1] This period which is fixed by the Limitation Act, cannot be extended by the Court under the provisions of S. 148 of the Code.[2] The High Court, may, however, under its rule making powers, extend S. 5 of the Limitation Act, to applications under this rule, and where it has been so extended, the Court may, for sufficient cause, excuse the delay in making the application. The Bombay High Court has so extended S. 5 of the Limitation Act, to applications under this rule. It has also been held by the same High Court that under R. 193 of the High Court Rules, a discretion is vested in the Chamber Judge, in a fit case, to extend the period of 10 days allowed under that rule in cases to which this order is applicable.[3]

Where an ex parte decree is passed in a summary suit and the defendant shows sufficient cause for his inability to appear and apply in time for leave to defend, the ex parte decree will be set aside.[4]

8. Interest.—Before the amendment of this rule by Act, XXX of 1926 interest was awardable at the rate specified, if any, up to the date of the decree. Under the present rule as amended by Act XXX of 1926 interest is to be awarded as follows:—

(a) Up to the institution of the suit, in accordance with the provisions of S. 79 or S. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, i.e., at the rate specified in the document, or where no rate is so specified, at 6 per cent. per annum.[1]

2. The words "and on such terms as to security, framing and recording issues, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit" which occurred at the end of the old section have been omitted and the present sub-R. (2) has been substituted in their place. See Note 4, infra.

2. The affidavit must disclose a defence.—The application for leave to defend must be supported by an affidavit disclosing a defence.[1] If the affidavit discloses a triable issue, that is, a plea which is at least plausible then leave should be granted,[2] whether the defence is a legal or an equitable one[3] and even though it may not ultimately turn out to be a good defence.[4] On the other hand, if no triable issue is disclosed by the affidavit leave should be refused.[5]

Leave to defend was granted in the following cases:—

(a) Where the claim was based on an endorsed promissory note and the defendant pleaded that the endorsement was a forgery.[6]

(b) Where a suit is instituted against a member of a joint Hindu family on a hundi drawn by the manager thereof, and the defendant pleaded that no notice of dishonour was given to the drawer.[7]

(c) Where the defendant prefers a cross-claim for damages for wrongful arrest before judgment in the very suit instituted against him.[8]

Leave to defend was refused in the following cases:—

(a) Where the defendant's plea was that the plaintiff is only a benamidar for another.[9]

(b) Where the defendant pleaded partial failure of consideration which is not ascertainable in money without collateral enquiry.[10]

(c) Where the defendant pleaded that the note sued on formed part of an account of the mutual dealings between him, the plaintiff and other parties.[11]

(d) Where the defendant pleaded a collateral agreement to discharge a promissory note not inconsistent with the note which contained an absolute promise to pay.[12]

3. Leave when granted conditionally—Sub-R. 2.—The Court has a discretion in the matter of attaching conditions to the grant of leave to defend. As a rule where a valid defence or triable issue is disclosed, the leave should be granted unconditionally.[1] It is only in cases where there appears to be so grave a suspicion that the Court comes to the conclusion that the defence is put in only to obtain further time, that conditions should be attached to the grant of the leave.[2] In such cases the proper course is to grant the leave on the defendant depositing the money into Court.[3]

In cases where money is deposited as a condition to obtaining leave to defend, the decretal amount will be a charge on such deposit.[4]

4. Limitation.—See Note 7 to R. 2, supra.

5. Appeal.—The High Court of Bombay has held that an order by a Judge in Chambers, granting leave on a condition which the defendant is not able to comply with, is a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and hence appealable under that clause.[1] But a mere order to give security as a condition to the grant of leave has been held by the Calcutta High Court not to be a "judgment" and hence not appealable.[2]

Synopsis.

1. Power to set aside decree.

1. Power to set aside decree.—A defendant who has not obtained leave to defend will not be allowed to appear at the hearing of the suit. In such cases a decree should follow. Thereafter the remedy of the defendant is to apply under O. 20, R. 11 or to apply under this rule to set aside the decree.[1] If, on such application, the defendant satisfies the Court about his being prevented by sufficient cause from appearing in time and getting leave to defend, the decree against him will be set aside and he will be allowed to contest the claim.[2]

O. 37, R.5.

Power to order bill, etc., to be deposited with officer of Court.

R. 5. [S. 535.] In any proceeding under this Order the Court may order the bill, hundi or note on which the suit is founded to be forthwith deposited with an officer of the Court, and may further order that all proceedings shall be stayed until the plaintiff gives security for the costs thereof.

O. 37, R.6.

Recovery of cost of noting non-acceptance of dishonoured bill or note.

R. 6. [S. 536.] The holder of every dishonoured bill of exchange or promissory note shall have the same remedies for the recovery of the expenses incurred in noting the same for non-acceptance or non-payment, or otherwise, by reason of such dishonour, as he has under this Order for the recovery of the amount of such bill or note.

ORDER XXXVIII.

ARREST AND ATTACHMENT BEFORE JUDGMENT.

Arrest before Judgment.

O. 38, R.1.

Where defendant may be called upon to furnish security for appearance.

R. 1. [Ss. 477, 478.] Where at any stage of a suit, other than a suit of the nature referred to in section 16, clauses (a) to (d), the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise,—

(a) that the defendant, with intent to delay the plaintiff, or to avoid any process of the Court or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,—

(i) has absconded or left the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(ii) is about to abscond or leave the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(iii) has disposed of or removed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court his property or any part thereof, or

(b) that the defendant is about to leave British India under circumstances affording reasonable probability that the plaintiff will or may thereby be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be passed against the defendant in the suit, the Court may issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not furnish security for his appearance:

Provided that the defendant shall not be arrested if he pays to the officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant any sum specified in the warrant as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim; and such sum shall be held in deposit by the Court until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court.

1. Legislative changes.—

The following are the material changes introduced in the rule:—

1. The words "other than a suit for the possession of the immoveable property" which occurred in the old section have been substituted by the words "other than a suit of the nature referred to in S. 16, Cls. (a) to (d)".
2. The proviso to the rule is new and is similar to R. 38 of O. 21.
3. The provision for the examination of the applicant which occurred in S. 478 of the old Code has been omitted. See Note 5, below.

2. Scope of the rule and of the Order.—The normal remedy available to a creditor having a demand against his debtor is to first obtain a decree against him and then to arrest him or to attach his property in execution of that decree under the provisions of O. 21. Under special circumstances, however, which are specified in this rule, and R. 5, infra, the creditor can take out arrest or attachment against his debtor even before judgment. The object of such a provision is to prevent any attempt on the part of the defendant to defeat the realisation of the decree that may be passed against him.

Before the creditor can resort to the extraordinary procedure provided by this rule he must show that there is good reason to believe that the debtor is about to depart from the jurisdiction of the Court or to make away with his property. (See Note 5, infra.) The rule will not enable him to take out arrest before judgment merely because it would secure easy execution of the decree.[1]

3. Distinction between Cls. (a) and (b).—In order to apply Cl. (a), it is necessary to show that the defendant has committed or is about to commit any of the acts specified therein with intent to delay the plaintiff or to avoid the process of the Court or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him.[1] No such intention need be proved in cases coming under Cl. (b). It is only necessary to show that the circumstances under which the defendant is about to leave British India afford a reasonable probability that the plaintiff will be obstructed or delayed in realising his decree.[2]

4. "Affording reasonable probability.—See Note 3 above.

5. "Is satisfied by affidavit or otherwise".—Under S. 478 of the old Code, the Court could issue a warrant to arrest the defendant before judgment where, after examining the applicant, and making such further investigation as it thinks fit, it is satisfied that the defendant has committed or is about to commit any of the acts specified in Cls. (a) and (b).[1] This provision has now been omitted and the Court can, without any such examination or investigation, act under this rule if it is satisfied by affidavit or otherwise of the existence of the circumstances specified in those clauses. Before the Court can act under this rule it must have reason to believe, on adequate materials, that, unless the jurisdiction is exercised, there is real danger that the defendant will remove himself or his property from the ambit of the powers of the Court.[1-a] Where there was reason to believe that the defendants were removing goods and selling them at less than cost price, and that they were evading arrest without furnishing any security, it was held the rule was properly applied to the case.[2] But where the defendant had to leave his place of residence for attendance in a criminal Court, it was held that the departure could not be said to be with a view to delay the plaintiff or to avoid the process of the Court or to obstruct or delay execution, and that therefore an order under this rule should not be passed.[3]

6. Suit must be bona fide.—Before exercising the powers conferred by this rule a Court should be satisfied that the plaintiff's suit is bona fide[1] and that his cause of action is prima facie an unimpeachable one subject to his proving the allegations made in the plaint.[2]

Where the plaintiff is undisputably entitled to a part of his claim the mere circumstance of the rest of the claim being of a disputable character does not render the suit mala fide.[3]

7. "To show cause why he should not furnish security for his appearance".—Where the Court issues a warrant of arrest against the defendant, he is entitled to show cause against his arrest. The "cause" must be either that he is not going to leave the jurisdiction of the Court, or not for so long a time, as will obstruct or tend to obstruct the plaintiff should he succeed, or that the suit is not a bona fide one, or that even if it is, the institu-

1. Security.—In a suit for the recovery of Rs. 29,508 the plaintiff obtained a warrant for arrest of the defendant but the warrant directed the warrant officer to demand Rs. 10,000 and if the sum was not paid, then, to arrest him. The defendant did not pay the amount and was arrested and brought before the Court. It was held that the Court should limit the security to be given to Rs. 10,000 as per terms of the notice in the warrant and not to order security to be given for amount claimed in the suit.[1] plaintiff in the event of his success. Consequently if the defendant becomes insolvent the plaintiff is entitled to appropriate it to the exclusion of the Official Receiver and other creditors. But a security given for the appearance of the defendant in Court whenever called upon, cannot be said to be to the credit of the suit or earmarked to the general purposes of the suit.[1]

4. "Or to furnish security for his appearance."—Where a judgment-debtor was released on furnishing security for his appearance on a certain day and the surety executed a bond for the due performance of the decree on failure of the judgment-debtor to satisfy it, it was held that the bond was not in accordance with the Court's order and the surety was discharged from his responsibility on the appearance in Court of the judgment-debtor on the specified day.[1] Where, on an application by the plaintiff, for arrest of the defendant, a pleader appeared on behalf of the latter and stood bail and thereupon the defendant was not arrested, it was held that the surety could not be allowed afterwards to contend that the security was illegal by reason of the fact that the defendant was not arrested.[2]

5. Extent of surety's liability.—The security to be furnished under this rule is for the appearance of the defendant while the suit is pending and until satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him. But the fact that the surety bond went beyond the terms of this rule and provided for the payment of the amount claimed in the suit in the event of a decree being passed against the defendant, will not render the bond unenforceable.[1] Nor will a surety for the appearance of the defendant, be relieved of his obligation merely because the decree is a compromise decree instead of being one on trial.[2]

The object of the security bond under this rule is merely to secure the rights of the judgment-creditor. The Government is not interested in the proceedings in any way. On the failure of the defendant to appear as required the Court cannot suo motu make an order forfeiting the bond and direct him to pay the whole of the maximum sum therein stipulated to Government. The enforcement of the bond should only be made on the application of the judgment-creditor and then, only to the extent of the sum of money found payable under the decree.[3]

R. 3. [S. 480.] (1) A surety for the appearance of a defendant may at any time apply to the Court in which he became such surety to be discharged from his obligation.

(2) On such application being made, the Court shall summon the defendant to appear or, if it thinks fit, may issue a warrant for his arrest in the first instance.

Discharge of surety. See S. 145, Note 9.

Voluntary surrender. See Note 1, Pts. (1) to (3).

1. Scope of the rule.—A surety for the appearance of the defendant may apply under this rule to be discharged from his obligation. But before he is so discharged it is essential that the defendant should appear before the Court either voluntarily or in pursuance of a summons or warrant of arrest issued against him under sub-R. (2).[1] If he is present in Court under circumstances which exempt him from arrest,[2] or if he appears under a protection order of the insolvency Court in his favour[3] the surety will not be entitled to be discharged from his obligation under this rule. Nor will the insolvency of the defendant release the surety from his obligation.[3-a]

Where the defendant appears before the Court under this rule, the Court should direct him to find fresh security; an order directing his detention without calling upon him to find fresh security is not legal and if the defendant leaves the Court in defiance of the order, he cannot be convicted for an offence under S. 225-B of the Penal Code.[4]

A surety for the due performance of any decree that may be passed against the defendant cannot apply under this rule for being discharged from his obligation.[5]

1. Legislative changes.—

The following are the material changes effected in this Rule:—

1. The words "or has quitted the jurisdiction of the Court leaving therein property belonging to him" which formed part of S. 483, Cl. (b) of the old Code have been omitted.

O. 38, R.5, Notes 1—2.

2. The provision for the examination of the applicant which occurred in S. 484 of the old Code has been omitted.

2. Scope, object and applicability of the rule.—The object for the provisions for arrest and attachment before judgment is to prevent any attempt on the part of the defendant to defeat the realization of the decree that may be passed against him.[1] It follows that the rule applies only where the defendant is about to dispose of, or remove from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, his properties, and not to cases where he has already disposed them of.[2] It is also necessary, before the rule can be applied, to show that the defendant has acted, or is about to act with the intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him.[3]

The rule applies, in terms, to suits. An application to enforce an award under paragraph 20 of the second schedule to the Code, when numbered and registered as a suit, becomes a suit for the purposes of this order and the Court can pass an order for attachment before judgment under this rule.[4] It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that this rule may be applied to proceedings other than suits by virtue of S. 141 of the Code, and that therefore a liquidation Court dealing with the proceedings under the Companies Act can make an order under this rule for attachment before judgment.[5] According to the High Court of Calcutta an attachment before judgment is a matter of relief and not of procedure.[6] It would seem to follow from this that S. 141 under which the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits should be followed in other proceedings also, will not enable the Court to apply this rule to such proceedings.

An application under this rule should specify the property to be attached and the estimated value thereof; an application generally for security being taken for the satisfaction of any decree that may be passed, without specifying any property is not one falling within the scope of the rule.[7] In the undermentioned case[8] where an application for injunction was made to restrain the defendant from withdrawing certain amounts standing to his credit, it was held that the order issued thereon really amounted to an attachment before judgment.

The Court can pass orders under this rule even if the trial of the suit has been stayed under S. 10 of the Code. (See Note 12 to S. 10, ante.) As to whether the Court has power in cases not covered by this rule, to pass orders for attachment before judgment, see Note 2 to S. 94.

The provisions of the Code relating to attachment before judgment apply to all proceedings referred to in S. 265 (3) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908) and in S. 16 of the Bengal Rent Act (VI of 1862).

3. Mortgage suits.—The provisions of this rule are not inapplicable to mortgage suits. Where there is a reasonable probability of the mortgaged property being insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt and of the mortgagee being entitled to get a personal decree in his favour for the balance, properties of the defendant other than those covered by the mortgage can be attached before judgment under this rule, if the requirements of the rule are satisfied.[1] The Courts should, however, act with extreme caution in such cases.[2]

4. Divorce proceedings.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an attachment before judgment is a matter of relief not of procedure, that therefore in divorce cases to which the Divorce Act, 1869 is applicable the Court is to be guided by S. 7 of that Act and that it cannot pass an order under this rule for attachment before judgment.[1]

5. Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis.—It has been held in the case cited below that an application to sue in forma pauperis does not become a "suit" until the same has been granted, and that, consequently, the Court has no jurisdiction to make an order for attachment before judgment under this rule.[1] The decision does not however, advert to the applicability or otherwise of S. 141 in such cases.

6. Applicability of O. 21, R. 63 to attachments under this rule.—See Note 6 to O. 21, R. 63 and Notes to R. 8 below.

thinks fit, it is satisfied that the defendant has removed or is about to remove or dispose of his property with the intention of obstructing or delaying the execution of any decree that may be passed against him. This provision has now been omitted and the Court can, without any such examination or investigation, act under this rule if it is satisfied by affidavit or otherwise of the existence of the specified circumstances.

The jurisdiction of Courts in attaching property before judgment is of an extraordinary nature and should be exercised sparingly and strictly in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Code.[1] The Court should be satisfied on two points, namely:—

(1) that the defendant is about to dispose of the whole or part of his property, and

(2) that the disposal is with the intention of obstructing or delaying the execution of any decree that may be passed against him.[2]

There must be definite evidence on these points and not merely vague allegations.[3] But the Court is not restricted to examine attempts at alienations made after the commencement of the action; it is open to it to look to the conduct of the parties immediately before the suit and to examine also the surrounding circumstances.[4]

12. "Is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property."—Before exercising jurisdiction under this rule and passing orders for the attachment of properties before judgment, the Court should satisfy itself of the practical certainty of the plaintiff's success and of the existence of a grave danger and of a real fear that a dishonest defendant, undoubtedly liable, is making away with the probable fruits of the judgment.[1] For this purpose it is not sufficient to merely allege that the defendant is likely to dispose of the property.[2] Nor is it sufficient to state that he is about to dispose it of, without stating the sources of such information.[3] The word "property" includes property of every description whether moveable or immoveable[4] and whether in the possession of the defendant or of some other person on his behalf.[5] It includes a debt[6] or a chose in action.[7] But the debt must be one that is accruing or has accrued.[8] Joint property belonging to a partnership of which the judgment-debtor is a member is not the property of the judgment-debtor and cannot be attached before judgment under this rule.[9]

13. "With intent to obstruct or delay."—The Court must be satisfied not only that the defendant is about to dispose of his property or to remove it from the jurisdiction of the Court, but also that his object in so doing, is to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him.[1] Such an intention cannot be inferred merely from the fact that the defendant has entered into an agreement to sell a portion of his property[2] or that he has actually alienated a portion of his properties[3] or that he has allowed his properties to be sold in execution of decrees or for arrears of revenue[4] or that he is running into debts or is attempting to secure debts already incurred by executing a mortgage in respect thereof.[5] A man is not debarred from dealing with his property simply because a suit has been filed against him.[6] Nor can an attachment be ordered merely because the defendant has failed to give an undertaking.[7]

14. "Court may direct security to be furnished for producing the attached property in Court."—The expression has reference only to such property as is capable of being produced in Court.[1]

15. Extent of surety's liability.—See Note 9 to S. 145, ante.

The surety is liable whether the decree is passed on a compromise[1] or on an award.[2] In a recent Bombay case, however, where a decree was passed on the consent of parties allowing the payment of the decree amount in 9 monthly instalments, the Court applied the principles of S. 133 of the Contract Act and held that the surety was discharged from liability on the ground that the compromise which was subsequently embodied in the decree prejudiced the rights of the surety against the debtor and that such a decree was not in the contemplation of the surety when he gave the bond.[3] Again where a surety for the production before the Court of property released from attachment before judgment was not put in possession of the property so released, it was held that he could not be proceeded against in the event of a decree being passed.[4]

But a mere notice given by the surety to the effect that he intends not to be surety any longer will not enable him to withdraw from the guarantee at any time.[5] Nor will the death of the defendant operate to discharge him.[6] It has been seen in Note 9 to S. 145 that the dismissal of a suit will put an end to the liability of the surety. But if the dismissal is one for default and the suit is immediately restored, the surety will remain liable under the bond.[7]

16. Whether the Court can extend time for furnishing security.—The Court may, under its general powers, extend the time for furnishing the security directed to be given under this rule.[1]

17. Property situated outside jurisdiction.—As has been seen in Note 7 to S. 136, ante there was a conflict of decisions under the old Code as to whether a Court could attach before judgment property situate outside its jurisdiction,[1] but in view of the omission in the present section of the words "within the jurisdiction of the Court," the Court can, now, order the attachment of properties whether situated within or without jurisdiction[2] though in the latter case, the proper procedure for attachment is to transmit the order to the Court in whose jurisdiction the property is situate.[3]

But a Court cannot order the attachment of properties outside British India.[4]

18. Effect of attachment.—See Note 5 to S. 64 and Note 11 to O. 21, R. 54. profits received by him.[1] An attachment of a debt, does not prevent the creditor from suing for the debt.[2] See also Note 16 to O. 21, R. 46. An attachment before judgment without complying with the provisions of R. 5 is ultra vires and does not come in the way of an alienation pending such attachment.[3]

19. Money deposited into Court in pursuance of the attachment if liable to rateable distribution.—Where money and moveables are attached before judgment by several creditors in various suits and they are realised by Court before any of them has obtained a decree, they should be held to the credit of all the suits and distributed rateably among all the creditors who have obtained decrees, before any of the others apply for payment.[1] Attachment before judgment does not give any priority over another who attaches in execution and may be defeated by a decree-holder who attaches in execution and applies for payment.[2] Money paid by a surety after the decree-holder takes out execution is also liable to rateable distribution.[3] (See also Notes to O. 21, R. 52 and Note 4 to S. 73.) Where, however, property attached before judgment is released on the defendant giving security of some of the items attached, the plaintiff on obtaining the decree is entitled to a preferential right and can execute against the security.[4]

20. Vesting order in insolvency how affects attachment before judgment.—Where the property of the defendant is attached before judgment and subsequently the defendant becomes insolvent, the attachment will not give any priority to the plaintiff over the Official Receiver or Official Assignee in respect of such properties.[1] If the defendant pays money into Court as security for raising the attachment and subsequently becomes insolvent, the plaintiff will not get any charge over the money as against the Official Assignee.[2] (See also Notes 10 and 14 to S. 64 and the case noted below.[3])

High Courts of Bombay and Patna, where the judgment-debtor dies after an attachment before judgment but before it is converted into an attachment in execution, the right of survivorship would prevail over the attachment.[1] The High Court of Madras has dissented from the said view and has held that as soon as a decree is passed in the suit the attachment before judgment would operate so as to defeat the right of survivorship, and that it is not necessary that any steps need be taken for converting the attachment into one in execution.[2] Where the judgment-debtor dies before decree the attachment before judgment will not have the effect of defeating the right of survivorship.[3] See also Note 10 to S. 64, ante.

22. Liability for wrongful attachment.—The general principle is that it is not an actionable wrong to institute Civil Proceedings. But proceedings taken for the arrest of the defendant or for the attachment of his property form an exception to the general rule and a suit is maintainable for damages for wrongful arrest or attachment.[1] In such a suit the plaintiff must show that the defendant was actuated by malice, that the proceedings were without reasonable and probable cause and that damages have been sustained thereby.[2] It should also be shown that the attachment was withdrawn in plaintiff's favour.[2-a] General and special damages may be awarded according to the circumstances of the case.[3]

The cause of action for the suit is the date of the wrongful seizure and not the date when the seizure is declared wrongful.[4]

See also Note 20 to S. 9; Note 4 to S. 62; and S. 95.

23. Conditional attachment.—"Conditional attachment" means an immediate attachment of a provisional kind conditioned to become plenary if security should not be furnished or cause shown according to the terms of the order.[1] The power given by O. 38, R. 5 to make an alternative order directing the defendant within a specified time to furnish security or to appear and show cause carries with it, as an incident, the power to confirm the order that security be furnished.[2] A conditional order of attachment cannot be made without at the same time making an order directing the defendant to furnish security or to show cause why he should not furnish security; without such an order the order of attachment will be invalid.[3] A conditional order of attachment pending the disposal of an application for the appointment of a guardian cannot be said to be invalid merely because the guardian proposed subsequently comes and states that he is unwilling to act.[4] When, after a conditional order is passed under this rule the suit is transferred to another Court the latter Court can pass further necessary orders in the matter.[5]

show cause.[1] An unconditional order of attachment under this rule can be passed only if the defendant fails to show cause why he should not furnish security or on his failure to furnish the security required.[2] The question whether there has been a failure to do so is one that must be judicially determined before drawing up the writ of attachment.[3]

Where, in order to avert an attachment, security is furnished, the Court has got power under this rule to cancel the security on cause being shown why the security should not be furnished.[4]

2. Property specified.—See Notes 1 and 17 to R. 5 above.

3. Appeal.—This rule contemplates orders of two kinds:—

1. An unconditional order directing attachment under Cl. 1 on the defendant's failure to furnish security or to show cause against the order for security, and
2. An order withdrawing a conditional attachment made under R. 5 on the defendant furnishing security or showing cause.

Both these orders are appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (q)[1]. But an order directing security to be furnished is not appealable.[2] Similarly where on an application for attachment under R. 5, the Court issued notice to the defendant without ordering any conditional attachment and, on the defendant's showing cause, in answer to the notice, the Court dismissed the application, it was held that the order of dismissal was not one under Cl. 2 of this rule and is therefore not appealable.[3] But where the defendant appears in answer to the notice and gives an undertaking not to alienate certain properties and the petition is thereupon closed, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that there is an order under this rule from which an appeal lies.[4]

Synopsis.

1 Mode of making attachment.

Attachment before judgment, if becomes one in execution. See R. 5, Note 8.

1. Mode of making attachment.—This rule provides that the attachment before judgment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree, i.e., in the manner provided in O. 21.

Thus an attachment before judgment of immovable property must be effected in the manner provided by O. 21, R. 54 by a prohibitory order. Where no such order is passed or published, there is no legal attachment.[1] Similarly an attachment before judgment of a debt must be made in the manner prescribed by O. 21, R. 46, and, as in cases under that rule, the Court cannot enquire into the truth or genuineness of the debt.[2] See also Note 7 to O. 21, R. 46.

Where there is no positive evidence that the attachment was not effected in accordance with the law, the Court should give effect to the presumption regarding the regularity of official acts.[3] See S. 114 of the Evidence Act, Note 3 to S. 64 and Note 5 to O. 21, R. 54.

An attachment ordered before judgment cannot be treated as a nullity merely because it is not completed till after judgment.[4]

O. 38, R. 8.

1. Investigation of claims to property attached before judgment.—See also Note 6 to O. 21, R. 63.

The procedure to be followed in the investigation of claims under this rule is the same as that provided by O. 21, Rr. 58 to 63, for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree.[1] Thus the claimant to a property attached before judgment must show that, at the date of attachment he had some interest in or was possessed of the property attached.[1-a] If it is not possible to decide the question without going into the question of title, the Court can go into that question also.[2] Orders passed on claims under this rule are governed by O. 21, R. 63 of the Code.[3]

The Official Assignee of the property of a defendant who has become insolvent[4] or the assignee of a decree attached before judgment,[5] can prefer a claim under this rule.

The omission to object to the validity of the attachment before judgment at the time of the application for such attachment is no bar to such objection being taken when an application is made for execution of the decree in the suit.[6]

As to the effect of the dismissal of the suit on the attachment before judgment see Note 9 to S. 64, ante and notes to R. 9, infra.

2. Revision.—An order refusing to release property attached before judgment is not revisable inasmuch as another remedy by suit is open.[1]

O. 38, R.9, Note 1.

1. Scope of the rule.—Sub-R. (2) of R. 6 refers to the withdrawal of a conditional attachment made under R. 5 while this rule refers to the withdrawal of an unconditional attachment effected under R. 6, and provides that the Court shall order such attachment to be withdrawn where

(a) the defendant furnishes the security required together with security for the costs of attachment, or,

This does not mean, however, that where the suit is dismissal that attachment continues in the absence of an order of withdrawal. Even without any such order, where the suit is dismissed, the attachment before judgment like all other ancillary and interim orders in the proceedings, falls with it and is not revived by the subsequent restoration of the suit or by the dismissal being reversed in appeal.[1] On the same principle when a suit abates, the attachment ceases and the subsequent setting aside of the abatement has not the effect of reviving the attachment.[2]

A files a suit against B and attaches certain properties before judgment. C prefers a claim thereto but the claim is dismissed on 28-2-1914; the suit is dismissed subsequently but the dismissal is set aside on appeal and a decree is passed in the suit. A again attaches the same property in execution of the decree. C again prefers a claim to the property and his claim is disallowed on 2-8-1921. He is entitled to file a suit under O. 21, R. 63 within one year from 2-8-1921. It is not barred by his not having brought the suit within one year of the former dismissal inasmuch as the attachment came to an end by the dismissal of the suit and it was unnecessary to file a suit under O. 21, R. 63 then.[3]

A claim suit under O. 21, R. 63 in respect of an attachment before judgment does not abate by reason of the dismissal of the suit in which the attachment was effected.[4]

O.38, R.10.

Attachment before judgment not to affect rights of strangers nor bar decree-holder from applying for sale.

Attachment before judgment and right of survivorship in Hindu law. See Note 21 to R. 5.

1. Rights of third persons not affected by attachment before judgment.—An attachment before judgment does not affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit. Thus a stranger to whom the property has been transferred before attachment[1] or a receiver of the property who is not a party to the suit[2] is not affected by the attachment. Where an agreement for sale has been entered into in respect of a property before the attachment thereof, the right of the purchaser to have the conveyance executed is not affected by the attachment.[3] A puisne mortgagee has a charge over the surplus sale proceeds in Court after the property was sold at the instance of the prior mortgagee. He is not affected by an attachment before judgment effected subsequent to the mortgage.[4]

As to the effect of attachment on the right of survivorship in a joint Hindu family see Note 21 to R. 5.

2. Other decree-holders' rights to execute their decree not affected.—It has been seen in Note 5 to S. 64 and Note 11 to O. 21, R. 54 that an attachment does not confer any title, charge, lien or priority in the property in favour of the person attaching it. It will not therefore, prevent the property from being attached and sold in execution of any other decree against the same judgment-debtor.[1] Where A attaches before judgment money deposited in Court to satisfy B's decree, he does not thereby get any right or title to the money and cannot apply to the Court holding the money for payment. He must apply for execution of his decree and for transfer of the money to his own suit.[2]

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope of the rule.
3. Re-attachment, if operates as waiver of attachment.
4. Objection that property is not attachable can be raised after decree.

1. Legislative changes:—

The words "upon an application for the execution of such decree to apply for a re-attachment of the property" have been substituted for the words "to re-attach property in execution of such decree". The words "upon an application" make it clear that after decree the plaintiff must apply like any other execution creditor.

2. Scope of the rule.—Where an attachment before judgment has been made the decree passed in the suit does not determine the attachment. It, therefore, continues to remain in force in the absence of a specific order of the Court raising it.[1] Upon an application for execution of the decree, it is not necessary to re-attach the properties.[2]

But as has been seen in Note 10 to S. 73 an attachment before judgment confers no right on the party who obtains the attachment, and he will not thereby become entitled to get rateable distribution under S. 73 unless, like other decree-holders, he applies for execution after getting his decree.[3]

3. Re-attachment, if operates as waiver of attachment.—If an attachment is made before judgment it does not terminate with the decree unless there is proof of an intention on the part of the plaintiff to abandon it. The mere fact that the properties were re-attached after judgment is no proof of such abandonment.[1]

4. Objection that property is not attachable can be raised after decree.—When attachment before judgment is asked for, the defendant is not bound to take exception to the validity of the attachment on the ground the property is inalienable. He could take such objection when an application is made for execution of the decree passed in the suit.[1]

1. Attachment of immoveable property— Small Cause Courts.

1. Attachment of immoveable property—Small Cause Courts.—As has been seen in the Notes to S. 7, ante, that before Act, I of 1926 was passed it had been held that an attachment of immoveable property before judgment could be passed by a Small Cause Court.[1] This rule newly introduced in this order now makes it clear that such an order cannot now be passed by a Small Cause Court.[2]

It has been held in the undermentioned case[3] that Act. I of 1926 operates retrospectively and that an order for conditional attachment before judgment made before the Act came into force cannot be confirmed and made absolute after the Act came into force.

ORDER XXXIX.

TEMPORARY INJUNCTIONS AND INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS.

Temporary Injunctions.

Cases in which temporary injunction may be granted.

R. 1. [S. 492.] Where in any suit it is proved by affidavit or otherwise—

(a) that any property in dispute in a suit[5] is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit,[6] or wrongfully sold in execution[10] of a decree, or

(b) that the defendant threatens, or intends, to remove or dispose of his property with a view to defraud his creditors, the Court may by order grant a temporary injunction to restrain such act, or make such other order for the purpose of staying and preventing the wasting, damaging, alienation, sale, removal or disposition of the property as the Court thinks fit, until the disposal of the suit or until further orders.[16]

[1877—Ss. 492, 503, 504; 1859—S. 92. See S. 45 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925 and R. S. C., O. 50, R. 6.]

1. Legislative changes.—

In the last paragraph of the rule, the words "(or refuse such injunction or other order)" which occurred at the end of the old section have been omitted and the words "until disposal of the suit or until further orders" have been newly added.

2. Injunctions, temporary and perpetual.—An injunction is a judicial process whereby a party is required to do, or to refrain from doing, any particular act.[1] It is in the nature of a preventive relief granted to a litigant quia timet, i.e., because he fears future possible injury.[2] Its main purpose is to preserve the subject-matter of the suit in status quo for the time being.[3]

Order 39, Rule 1—Note 2.

(1) See also The Firm, Raghbir Singh Jaswant v. Narayan Singh, 1923 Lah 48 (50): 72 Ind Cas 569 [An order to a defendant to prepare an inventory and to keep accounts is an order under this rule].

Injunctions are of two kinds, temporary and perpetual. A perpetual injunction restrains a party for ever from doing the act specified. It is regulated by Ss. 54 to 57 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877,[4] and can be granted only by a decree passed after the hearing of the suit on the merits. A temporary injunction, on the other hand, enures only until the disposal of the suit in which it is granted or until the further orders of Court. It is regulated by the provision of O. 39 of the Code[5] and can be granted on an interlocutory application at any stage of the suit. Although temporary injunctions are regulated by the Code, the general principles governing their grant have been held to be the same as those governing the grant of perpetual injunctions[6] though in the undermentioned case,[7] the rule was held to be too broadly stated. An injunction whether temporary or perpetual, compelling a party to do a particular act is called a mandatory injunction. In a Bombay case,[8] Beaman, J., doubted whether a mofussil Court in India had power to issue a temporary injunction in a mandatory form. Such a power has, however, been recognised in the undermentioned cases.[9]

3. Scope and principle of the rule.—This rule lays down the circumstances under which a temporary injunction can be granted,[1] and unless those circumstances exist, a Court has no jurisdiction to grant it.[2] But the fact that those circumstances exist, does not compel the Court to grant it in all cases inasmuch as the rule only says that in the cases mentioned therein, the Court may grant an injunction. Thus, the granting of an injunction under the rule is purely within the discretion of the Court.[3] This discretion, however, should, like other cases of discretion vested in Courts, be exercised in accordance with reason and on sound judicial principles.[4]

What, then, are the principles which govern the exercise of the discretion conferred by this rule? They are set out in the undermentioned cases[5] and are to the effect that a person who seeks a temporary injunction must satisfy the Court:—

O 39, R. 1, Note 3.

Firstly that there is a serious question to be tried in the suit and that on the facts before the Court there is a probability of his being entitled to the relief, asked for by him.

Secondly that the Court's interference is necessary to protect him from that species of injury which the Court calls irreparable, before his legal right can be established on trial, and

Thirdly that the comparative mischief or inconvenience which is likely to issue from withholding the injunction will be greater than that which is likely to arise from granting it.

The first of the above conditions is what is generally termed "a prima facie case." In other words, the prima facie existence of a right and its infringement are the first condition for the grant of a temporary injunction[6]

O. 39, R. 1, Note 3.

But the existence of a prima facie case is not by itself sufficient. The applicant should further satisfy the second condition by showing that irreparable injury will accrue to him if the injunction is not granted[7] and that there is no other remedy open to him by which he could protect himself from the consequences of the apprehended injury.[8] "Irreparable injury", however, does not mean that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury but means only that the injury must be a material one, i.e., one, that cannot be adequately compensated for in damages.[9] The third condition is what is called the principle of the "balance of convenience". In applying this principle, the Court should weigh the amount of substantial mischief that is likely to be done to the applicant if the injunction is refused and compare it with that which is likely to be caused to the other side if the injunction is granted.[10] If, on such a consideration, the Court thinks that pending the determination of the suit, the subject-matter should be maintained in status quo, an injunction for that purpose should be issued.[11]. It must, however, be remembered that a temporary injunction should not be granted on the balance of convenience alone without there also being a prima facie case in favour of the applicant.[12]

Even where all the above conditions are satisfied, a temporary injunction may nevertheless be refused for other reasons. Thus it can be refused on the ground of delay.[13] For other circumstances justifying such refusal, see the undermentioned cases.[14]

Where the suit itself is one for a perpetual injunction, a temporary injunction ought not to be refused where such refusal would defeat the object of the suit.[15] In such a case, the mere possibility of a perpetual injunction being refused ultimately will be no ground for refusing a temporary injunction.[16] Where, however, there is no chance at all of a perpetual injunction being granted in the suit, a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit may be refused.[17]

The power to grant temporary injunctions under O. 39 extends to an appellate Court in regard to appeals pending before it.[18] The provisions of O. 39 apply also to proceedings in liquidation.[19]

Has a Court inherent jurisdiction to grant a temporary injunction? It has been held that the inherent jurisdiction of the High Courts, as Courts of equity, to grant such injunctions independently of the Civil Procedure Code, is, beyond all doubt.[20] (See also Notes under Note No. 22, infra.) As regards other Courts there is a conflict of opinion for which, see Note 2 to S. 94, ante.

O. 39, R. 1, Notes 4—6.

4. Applicability of the rule to probate proceedings.—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the rule does not apply to probate proceedings on the ground that the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, indicate the intention of the Legislature that that act itself should be looked to, for the powers necessary for the proper custody of property pending the proceedings instead of leaving the Court to act under the Civil Procedure Code.[1] The High Court of Calcutta has held that, assuming that the provisions of O. 39 apply to such cases, there could be no "property in dispute" in such a proceeding and that, therefore, no injunction can be issued under this rule, though, in proper cases, the Court could act under R. 7, infra.[2]

5. "Any property in dispute in a suit."—The rule contemplates cases where the property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged etc.[1] "Property in dispute in the suit" means only such property as is the subject-matter of the suit.[2] For cases of suits for partition of joint estates, see the undermentioned cases.[3]

6. "In danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit".—An injunction can be granted under this rule only if there is a real danger of the subject-matter of the suit being wasted, or damaged, etc., by a party to the suit.[1] Where there is no allegation of danger of such waste or damage, the application should be rejected.[2] But a mere allegation is not enough. There must be proof of actual or reasonably apprehended danger of such waste or damage, before an injunction can be granted.[3] The question as to what constitutes sufficient danger of waste or damage will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. For illustrative cases, see the undermentioned cases.[4]

Note 7.

7. Injunctions in respect of judicial proceedings.—An injunction can be granted to restrain a party from proceeding with judicial proceedings (other than execution proceedings) pending in the same or in another Court if such injunction is necessary to prevent multiplicity of proceedings and not otherwise.[1] It can be issued even in respect of proceedings pending in a foreign Court if the party to be so restrained resides within the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the injunction.[2] In Madras, however, it has been held that such a power exists only in the High Court under its equity jurisdiction and not in the mofussil Courts.[3] Speaking generally, a civil Court in the mofussil, cannot issue an injunction restraining proceedings in a criminal Court,[4] though the High Courts, can do so in proper cases.[5] Vide also notes under Note Nos. 22, 23 and 24.

As regards proceedings in execution of a decree, it is clear that the High Courts have the power, under their equity jurisdiction to restrain a party by a temporary injunction from executing his decree in another Court of even co-ordinate jurisdiction.[6] But the mofussil Courts have no such power unless the case comes within the terms of O. 39, Rr. 1 and 2 or unless they could act under their inherent powers. As to whether and where the Court can restrain a party from taking such proceedings under the provisions of O. 39, Rr. 1 and 2, see Note 3 above and also the undermentioned cases.[7] As to the inherent powers of the Court to grant temporary injunctions, see Note 2 to S. 94, ante.

Courts cannot be too careful as to the mode in which their machinery is used to delay a decree-holder in another suit in obtaining the fruits of his decree.[8] Consequently an injunction in respect of a judicial proceeding should not be issued except in strong cases or unless the facts fall within the express provisions of O. 39.[9]

A permanent injunction can, of course, be granted under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, restraining a party from proceeding with the execution of a decree in another Court.[10]

8. Right to worship.—No person is entitled to enforce his religious views upon another, or to restrain that other from doing any lawful act or from making any lawful use of his property, simply because it would not fit in with the religious tenets of that person; so long as the right to worship is not interfered with, the owner of a property can do what he likes with it.[1] Where, however, such act or user amounts to an actionable wrong, it can be restrained by an injunction.[2]

9. Religious office.—An injunction can be granted restraining obstruction to a person's performing his religious duty.[1] But no injunction will be granted which would have the effect of forcing upon a section of the community the services of a priest whom they are unable to recognise, or forbidding them to employ a priest whose ministration they desire.[2]

The trustee of a temple may be restrained by injunction from making unjustifiable changes which would affect the character of the temple.[3] Similarly where a new seal sought to be used in connection with a religious office had the effect of extending rights which, according to the old seal, had been limited, the use of such seal was held restrainable by injunction.[4]

10. "Wrongfully sold in execution of a decree."—The provisions of this rule will not apply unless the property is in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree. A obtains a decree against B and in execution thereof proceeds to sell properties belonging to B. B thereupon files a suit for a declaration that the decree is not binding on him for various reasons. He also prays for a temporary injunction under this rule.

Does such an application lie? No. The reason is that until the decree is set aside it is binding on the parties thereto, and A has every right to execute it. There is thus no danger of property being wrongfully sold in execution of the decree.[1] But suppose A, in execution of a decree obtained by him against B, attaches or otherwise proceeds against properties which belong to C, and the latter thereupon files a suit for declaration of his rights thereto and prays for a temporary injunction restraining A from executing his decree. This is a case of properties being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree and the application for injunction is maintainable under this rule.[2] The words "or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree" were deleted from sub-R. (1) by the Allahabad High Court by rules framed under S. 122 of the Code, with the result that an application under this rule was held not maintainable in Allahabad on the ground that any property is in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree.[3] The said words have, however, now been restored. See also the Local Amendments for Rangoon, Nagpur and Oudh.

Where a case comes under this rule, an application for injunction is the proper remedy, and not an application to the executing Court for stay of execution.[4]

Where the sale has already taken place no injunction will be granted restraining such sale.[5] But an injunction can be granted, even in such a case, restraining the delivery of possession.[6]

In granting injunctions restraining sales in execution, Courts should exercise their discretion cautiously and wisely, and see that the machinery of the Court is not abused, for fraudulent purposes.[7]

A Court is not debarred from restraining a party, in cases covered by Rr. 1 and 2 from executing his decree in another Court merely by reason of the fact, that such Court is of a superior grade to that of the Court which issues the injunction inasmuch as the latter Court has jurisdiction over the suit and to pass orders on all interlocutory applications.[8]

11. Execution of decree of Revenue Court.—The High Court of Allahabad has held that the word "decree" does not include the decree of a Revenue Court, and that an injunction cannot be granted restraining the sale in execution of such a decree.[1] Where, however, the decree of a Revenue Court is being executed by a civil Court, the High Court of Calcutta has held that an injunction restraining its execution can be granted under this rule on the ground that the decree in such a case should be treated as a decree of a civil Court for purposes of execution.[2]

12. Disposal of property in fraud of creditors.—An injunction can be granted to restrain a threatened disposal of property in fraud of creditors whether the property is movable or immovable.[1] But in either case, the threat or intention to remove or dispose of property to defraud creditors must be proved by definite evidence.[2]

13. Against whom injunction can be granted.—An injunction can be issued only against a party to the suit and not against either a Court[1] or a stranger to the suit.[2]

Nor can an injunction be ordinarily granted against a person residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court granting it, and against whom the order cannot be enforced within that Court's jurisdiction.[3] Where, however, the order can be so enforced,[4] or, where the person has submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court,[5] it can be issued against him. narily be issued against Government Officers bona fide exercising rights or alleged rights in the course of their duty,[6] nor against public bodies under similar circumstances,[7] unless it would amount to a manifest injury to refuse to do so.[8]

An injunction does not run with the land and cannot, therefore, avail against property in the hands of a purchaser.[9] But when it has been issued against a defendant, it can, if the defendant dies, be enforced against his legal representatives.[10]

An injunction can be granted against a co-owner or a co-sharer in possession restraining him from using the property in a manner which will change the nature of the property.[11] Great caution should, however, be exercised in such cases.[12]

14. Injunctions will be granted only in any suit.—Before an injunction can be granted under this rule:—

(i) A suit must, in the first place, be pending. Thus no injunction can be granted if the suit has not yet been filed or if the suit has been disposed of.[1]

(ii) It must be pending on the file of the Court granting the injunction.[2]

15. Injunction in suit for declaration only.—It would appear that a temporary injunction can be granted even in a suit for mere declaration;[1] but not where the plaintiff, if successful in the suit, will have to bring another suit for enforcing the right which he seeks to keep undisturbed by the injunction.[2] It is also not proper, in a suit for mere declaration, to grant an injunction staying another suit pending in another Court.[3]

16. Duration of temporary injunction.—An order of temporary injunction takes effect only from the time when it is communicated to the party.[1] It terminates as soon as the suit in which it is granted terminates[2] even though it may have been stated to be "until further orders".[3]

17. Effect of temporary injunction.—An alienation made contrary to an order of injunction is not, on that account, void.[1] But the party guilty of the breach will be liable for contempt of Court or damages.[2] (Vide also notes under Note No. 18, "Breach of injunction", infra.)

18. Breach of injunction.—An injunction although subsequently discharged must be obeyed while it lasts.[1] When the injunction is disobeyed, the party guilty of such disobedience can be proceeded against for contempt under the provisions of R. 2, Cl. 3.[2] The Court which granted the injunction will be the Court competent to punish disobedience,[3] but it must be set in motion by the aggrieved party and cannot act suo motu in the matter.[4] their own Letters Patent, power of enforcing obedience of their orders by committing the delinquent for contempt.[5]

19. Injunction to restrain marriage.—An injunction may be granted to prevent the marriage of a bride for a second time to another husband.[1] But if the bride is a Mahomedan of age and has ceased to be the wife of her former husband, no injunction to restrain the second marriage will be granted either against herself or against her relations.[2]

An injunction will not be granted to restrain a Hindu woman from marrying her minor daughter to a third party pending a suit for specific performance of a contract to marry.[3] But where the father of the bride files a suit for injunction against his wife restraining her from giving away the bride in marriage, a temporary injunction may be granted inasmuch as the father has the predominant right to give his girl in marriage.[4]

20. Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order granting as well as from an order refusing a temporary injunction under this rule.[1] An appeal will also lie if the order purports to be made under this rule even though the Court had no jurisdiction to pass it.[1-a]

It is for the appellant to show in appeals against orders under this rule that the Lower Court acted wrongly in the exercise of its discretion.[2] The mere fact that the appellate Court might have come to a different conclusion is not enough.[3] No second appeal lies from an order under this rule.[4] As has been seen in the Notes to Ss. 96 and 104, those sections only apply to appeals from Courts of inferior jurisdiction to Courts of superior jurisdiction and not to appeal within the High Court, i.e., from one or more Judges of the High Court to other Judges of the same Court.[5] No appeal will, therefore, lie under O. 43, R. 1 from an order of a single Judge of a High Court, refusing to grant a temporary injunction. Nor will an appeal lie under

Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against such an order inasmuch as such an order is not a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15.[6]

An order directing the furnishing of security or the submission of accounts passed or directing notice to the opposite party on an application for temporary injunction is not an order under O. 39, R. 1 and is not, therefore, appealable.[7]

21. Revision.—An order passed without jurisdiction is liable to revision. But no revision will lie on the mere ground of an error of judgment of the Lower Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction.[1]

Where a Court on appeal renews a temporary injunction dissolved by the first Court, a revision may lie against it.[2]

22. Powers of High Court—General.—Apart from the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Courts have jurisdiction to grant temporary injunctions in suitable cases.[1] The order of injunction will, however, be directed to a party and not to a Court.[2]

23. Power to restrain party from proceeding with suit in another Court.—Apart from the provisions of the Code, the High Courts have, by virtue of their equity jurisdiction, power to restrain a party before them from proceeding with a suit in another Court.[1] Such power extends to restraining a party from proceeding with a suit in a foreign Court, but the power in such cases should be exercised with the greatest caution.[2] An order to the said effect cannot, however, prevent the party from proceeding with Injunction to restrain repetition or continuance of breach.

R. 2. [S. 493.] (1) In any suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind, whether compensation is claimed in the suit or not, the plaintiff may, at any time after the commencement of suit, and either before or after judgment, apply to the Court for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from committing the breach of contract or injury complained of, or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right.

(2) The Court may by order grant such injunction, on such terms as to the duration of the injunction, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit.

(3) In case of disobedience, or of breach of any such terms, the Court granting an injunction may order the property of the person guilty of such disobedience or breach to be attached, and may also order such person to be detained in the civil prison for a term not exceeding six months, unless in the meantime the Court directs his release.

(4) No attachment under this rule shall remain in force for more than one year, at the end of which time, if the disobedience or breach continues, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award such compen-

1. Legislative changes:—

The words "of any kind" after the words "or other injury" are new. See Note 4 below.

2. Scope and principle of the rule.—This rule deals with the grant of injunctions in a particular class of cases not covered by the provisions of R. 1, viz., cases of apprehended breach of contract or other injury of any kind. Where, therefore, there is no such apprehended breach of contract or other injury of any kind, this rule will not apply.[1]

As has been seen in Note 2 to R. 1 above, the general principles governing the grant of temporary injunctions is the same as those governing the grant of perpetual injunction. Now S. 56, Cl. (f) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 provides that an injunction cannot be granted "to prevent the breach of a contract the performance of which would not be specifically enforced", and under S. 21, Cl. (a) of that Act, a contract will not be specifically enforced when the non-preformance of it can be adequately compensated for, by the award of damages. This therefore furnishes an important test to see whether temporary injunction should be granted in cases of breaches of contract. Further the general principles governing the grant of an injunction under R. 1, also govern the grant of an injunction under this rule. Thus:—

(i) Before the granting of an injunction under this rule, the Court should be satisfied that the plaintiff has a prima facie case;[2] that the Court's interference is necessary to protect him from irreparable or at least serious injury;[3] and that there is no other sufficient remedy open to him by which to protect himself.[4] For cases where such injunction was granted, see the undermentioned cases.[5]

(ii) Where a perpetual injunction has not been asked for in the suit[6] or where the facts show prima facie, that there is no chance of a perpetual injunction or specific performance being granted,[7] a temporary injunction will be refused.

(iii) Delay in bringing the suit or applying for the injunction will be a ground for refusing the same.[8]

An injunction under this rule also, can be issued only against the defendant in the suit and none else.[9] It is not necessary that the defendant should be living within the Court's jurisdiction.[10]

Generally speaking, Courts will not issue an injunction restraining a candidate from partaking in an election.[11] Further a Court holding an enquiry into the validity of an election under the District Municipalities Act, has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the candidate from taking his seat.[12] The rule extends to proceedings under the Guardian and Wards Act.[13]

This rule applies to proceedings under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, VI of 1908. See S. 265 (3) thereof.

3. Injunction to restrain breach of contract.—Pending a suit relating to a contract, the Court can, under this rule, grant an injunction restraining the commission of any Act which will involve a breach of the contract.[1] Before such injunction is granted, however, the applicant must satisfy the Court that there is a completed contract under which he has acquired a right[2] and that irreparable injury will be sustained by him unless the injunction is granted.[3] Further, as has already been noticed under the previous Note, no injunction will be granted in respect of a contract of which specific performance will be refused. Thus,

(i) no injunction will be granted to restrain marriage[4] or adoption[5] in breach of an agreement to marry or adopt respectively,

(ii) no injunction will be granted to restrain breach of a contract in restraint of trade or profession. But a contract to supply goods exclusively to the promisee[6] and a contract to serve the promisee exclusively for a period[7] are not contracts in restraint of trade or profession and an injunction can, therefore, be granted to restrain breaches of such contracts,

(iii) no injunction will be granted which will have the effect of compelling the employment of any person, in matters requiring services of a personal nature,[8]

(iv) no injunction will be given where the circumstances under which the contract was made are such, as to give the plaintiff an unfair advantage over the defendant.[9]

(v) no injunction will be given where money compensation will afford an adequate relief for the non-performance of the contract.[10]

Where the defendant alleges a breach of contract and refers the matter to arbitration under a provision contained in the contract, and the plaintiff thereupon files a suit attacking the contract and asks for an injunction restraining the arbitration proceedings pending disposal of the suit, the injunction asked for will not be granted if the suit is based on a denial of the existence of the contract, but will be granted if the suit is based on an attack of the contract on equitable grounds like fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the other party.[11]

4. "Or other injury of any kind".—Under the old Code, the words 'of any kind' were absent. It was held by the High Court of Allahabad that the word 'injury' referred only to injuries akin to breaches of contract and that, therefore, no injunction could be granted in respect of other kinds of injury such as trespass or nuisance.[1] The addition of the words 'of any kind'

after the words 'or other injury' in the present section, makes it clear that an injunction can be granted to restrain any kind of legal injury. The word 'injury' connotes an act or omission contrary to law, resulting in an infringement of a right vested in a person.[1-a] Thus an infringement of a copyright or of a trade-mark,[2] or an obstruction to a right of easement[3] or to the exercise of rights of property[4] or of a right of public worship[5] or the commission of a waste or of a nuisance[6] are all injuries in respect of which an injunction may be granted under this rule. But the lawful exercise of a right vested in a person cannot furnish a ground for granting an injunction restraining such persons from exercising it.[7]

O. 39, R. 2, Notes 4—6.

It is not necessary that the injury should have been actually suffered, though it is essential that the Court should be satisfied that there is a real or reasonable apprehension of such injury.[8] An injunction will be refused if the applicant has acquiesced in the act or omission complained of.[9]

5. Grant of injunction on terms.—Sub-R. (2) empowers the Court in granting injunctions to impose such conditions as it deems necessary. Thus it may call for an undertaking from the plaintiff that he will abide by any order which the Court may make as to damages.[1] Or, where the plaintiffs are a foreign firm and do not carry on business in British India it is reasonable that they should be put on terms.[2]

6. Disobedience to injunction—Effect.—See also N. 18 to R. 1.—A disobedience of an order of injunction is a contempt of Court. Sub-R. (3) confers on Courts the power to punish such contempt and, further, prescribes the punishment to be awarded therefor.[1] While the High Courts, as Courts of record, have inherent jurisdiction to commit for contempt, the other Courts have no such power apart from the provisions of this rule.[2]

The provisions of the sub-rule apply not only to disobedience of an order issued under Cls. (1) and (2) of R. 2 but has a more general application and applies equally to disobedience of all injunctions issued under S. 94 of the Code.[3]

As regards the power conferred by this sub-rule for punishing disobedience of injunctions, the following points must be noted:—

(1) The Court which ordered the injunction is the Court which can punish its disobedience. Thus where an order of injunction was passed by a particular Court and the suit was thereupon transferred to another Court it was held that the latter Court had no power to punish disobedience of the injunction passed by the former Court.[4] It has also been held that an interlocutory application to punish for contempt under this sub-rule cannot be transferred to another Court and thus give that Court jurisdiction to deal with it.[5] But a Court to which the business of the Court granting the injunction has been transferred under S. 150 of the Code, can exercise the power of punishment under this sub-rule.[6] The appellate Court has the same power to order punishment as the original Court.[6-a]

(2) In taking action under this sub-rule, the Court cannot act suo motu but only on the application of the aggrieved party.[7]

As regards the penalty for disobedience of an injunction it has been held that the sub-rule should be strictly construed and that cannot be read as providing any penalty other than that specifically mentioned in it.[8] Thus the disobedience will not render any transaction void,[9] nor can a separate suit be filed for damages for non-compliance with an order of injunction,[10] the six months' period of detention prescribed in the sub-rule cannot even indirectly be added to.[11] But the two modes of punishment prescribed are only alternative and it is not necessary that attachment should be effected before imprisonment is ordered.[12] Where an injunction was issued against a person restraining him from bringing about the marriage of a girl, but the marriage took place, the person injuncted not being responsible for it, and he was sought to be punished for contempt on the ground that he did not do all in his power to prevent the marriage, it was held, refusing the application, that the injunction order contained no direction that he should do all in his power to prevent the marriage.[13] In another case, where a company had been restrained from holding a meeting but the share-holders had not been restrained from voting and, at a meeting held in a private house, some of the share-holders attended and voted, it was held that they were not liable to punishment for disobedience.[14]

Although there might be a breach of an injunction in the literal sense, yet, if the party acted in good faith and without any intention to violate the order, he will not be liable for punishment.[15]

Where an injunction has been disobeyed the fact that the injunction has been subsequently dissolved will not exempt the party from punishment.[16] Although an injunction takes effect from the date of the service of the order, yet, if the order had been passed in the presence of the counsel for both sides, it is no excuse to say that the order was not communicated to the party personally.[17]

A person against whom no injunction has been ordered, cannot be punished under this sub-rule on the ground that he abetted the disobedience of the order.[18]

An undertaking not to alienate, duly recorded in the order of the Court, amounts to an injunction and a breach thereof is liable to be punished under this rule.[19]

7. Power to grant temporary injunction in mandatory form.—Courts in England have power to grant temporary mandatory injunction.[1] In a Bombay case, Beaman, J., held that the power to issue such an injunction was not within the scope of O. 39 and doubted whether a mofussil Court in India had power to issue such an injunction.[2] The power was, however, conceded in another decision of the same Court[3] and has been affirmed beyond all doubt in a number of other cases.[4]

8. Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule whether the order is one inflicting punishment or one refusing to take action.[1]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Appeal.

1. Scope of the rule.—Courts have jurisdiction to grant an injunction ex parte. But it should not be so granted without strong and grave reasons.[1] In other words, except where the delay involved in the issue of notice will defeat the object of the injunction notice should be ordered to the party before injunction is ordered against him.[2] An injunction granted in violation of this principle is irregular.[3]

In an appeal from an order granting an ad interim injunction, the appellate Court under this rule can pass an order ex parte staying the operation of the injunction order.[4]

2. Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order directing notice before granting injunction.[1]

R. 4. [S. 496.] Any order for an injunction may be discharged, or varied, or set aside by the Court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

O. 39, R. 4, Notes 1—2.

1. Scope of the rule.—This rule is intended to cover two classes of cases:—

(1) Where an urgent order ex parte has been made under R. 3, and

(2) Where an injunction order already in force, has owing to fresh circumstances, become unduly harsh or unnecessary or unworkable.[1] It is not intended to set at nought the ordinary rule that where an injunction has been ordered after granting each side an opportunity of being heard, it is final and cannot be interfered with except on the presentation of new matter not available when the original order was passed.[2]

Where an injunction is dissolved under this rule, the plaintiff may apply again for injunction if he can make out a sufficient case.[3]

2. Appeal.—An order under this rule is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (r).[1]

2 Scope of the rule.

"Any other just and sufficient cause." See Note 1.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The words "or attached before judgment in such suit" are new.
2. The words "or which for any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once" are also new, and have been added in order to empower the Court to order sale of securities when the state of the market requires such a course.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule will apply only if the property is either the subject-matter of the suit or has been attached before judgment in the suit.[1] An order under this rule can be passed only on an application made therefor and after notice to all the parties concerned.[2] The rule does not empower the Court to appoint a commissioner to sell any crop on the property attached.[3]

Detention, preservation, Inspection etc., of subject-matter of suit.

R. 7. [S. 499.] (1) The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, and on such terms as it thinks fit,—

(a) make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property which is the subject-matter of such suit, or as to which any question may arise therein;

(b) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any person to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any other party to such suit; and

(c) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence.

Revision. See Note 2, F.-N. (1).

1. Legislative changes :—

> The words "or as to which any question may arise therein" in sub-R. (1) (a) are new.

2. Scope of the rule.—The first part of the rule applies to cases where the articles are in the possession or custody of the party against whom the order is made.[1] As to the power of Courts to pass an order under this rule in Probate Proceedings, see the undermentioned cases.[2]

3. Inspection of subject-matter of suit.—Where, in respect of the property of one person a right accrues in favour of another and that right cannot be measured without inspection of the property, such inspection can be ordered under this rule.[1] Thus in a suit for damages alleged to have been caused to the plaintiff by the defendant's construction in his premises and the extent of the alleged injury has to be ascertained, the Court has jurisdiction, under this rule, to order an inspection for the purpose.[2] In ordering such inspection, the Court should take care to impose as little inconvenience as possible on those against whom the order is made.[3]

4. Inventory.—The power to order inspection implies a power to order the preparation of an inventory if such inventory is essential for a proper decision of the case.[1] If such an inventory is not so essential, it should not be ordered.[2]

5. Application for such order to be after notice.—An application for an order under this rule can only be made after reasonable notice to the parties concerned.[1]

6. Power to allow party to draw money paid into Court pending decision.—Where money paid into Court is claimed both by the plaintiff and by the defendant, the court cannot allow one of them alone to draw the amount pending the decision of the case even on his furnishing security for restitution.[1]

7. Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order under this rule.[1] But if an order applied for under this rule is wrongly refused, the proper course is to apply for review if any new matter is forthcoming.[2]

Two Courts appointing receivers in respect of the same properties—Whether expedient. See Note 12, Pt. (8).

1. Legislative changes:—

The portions of S. 503 dealing with receiver's remuneration and receiver's duties have been re-enacted as Rr. 2 and 3 of this order. Apart from this, the present rule contains the following changes:—

(1) S. 503 provided for the appointment of a receiver whenever it appeared "to be necessary for the realisation, preservation or better custody or management of any property". Under the present rule, the Court may appoint a receiver where it appears to be "just and convenient" to do so.

(2) S. 503 applied only to property which was the subject of the suit or attachment.[1] This restriction has been removed now.

Order 40, Rule 1—Note 1.

[1] Sundaram v. Sankara, (1886) 9 Mad 334

(3) The words "whether before or after the decree" in the present rule are new.

Thus the present rule is much wider in its scope than S. 503.

As to S. 243 of the Code of 1859, see the undermentioned cases.[2]

2. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule authorises a Court to appoint a receiver whenever it appears to it to be just and convenient to do so. The matter is thus left to the discretion of the Court.[1] Such discretion must, however, be exercised, not arbitrarily but judicially and according to legal principles. (See Note 14, infra.) The object and purpose of the appointment of a receiver may generally be stated to be the preservation of the subject-matter of the litigation pending a judicial determination of the rights of the parties thereto.[1-a] The Court does not, at the time of appointment of a receiver arrive at any final decision on the merits of the case, its aim being merely to preserve the status quo ante during the litigation.[2] Where a receiver is appointed under this rule in respect of any property, such property is in costodia legis for the benefit of the several parties according to their titles (see Notes 27 and 28, infra). When the Court appoints a person as the "manager" of the suit property, it really appoints a receiver, the term "Manager" being only another name for a receiver.[3] A supurdar to whom moveable property attached in execution is handed over for safe custody is not a receiver.[4]

3. Receiver, if can be appointed in proceedings other than suits.—The omission in R. 1 of the words "subject-matter of suit" which occurred in S. 503 of the old Code makes it clear that a receiver can be appointed in proceedings other than suits.[1] Thus, a receiver may now be appointed in proceedings for the appointment of a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act,[2] or in a suit for rent and ejectment under Bengal Act, VIII of 1869[3] or under S. 32 of the Bengal Settled Estates Act, III of 1904 for the purpose of recovering the amount of any decree against a tenant for life of a settled Estate. But a Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in proceedings under the Succession Certificate Act[4] or in proceedings for the removal of a trustee under S. 74 of the Trusts Act[5] or to manage any occupancy holding under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act.[6]

4. Receiver, if and when may be appointed in mortgage suits.—The High Court of Allahabad has held that O. 40 has no application to mortgage suits inasmuch as O. 34 provides in itself a complete machinery for such suits.[1] But the general trend of opinion of the other High Courts is that O. 40 is not inapplicable to mortgage suits and that a receiver can be appointed even if the mortgage is a simple one.[2] The test to be applied in this class of suits is, as in the case of other suits, to consider whether it will be just and convenient to appoint a receiver.[2-a] A receiver cannot be appointed merely because it is convenient to the mortgagee to do so,[3] or because a private sale by the receiver will fetch a higher price than the Court sale,[4] or because the mortgagor's reversioners support the appointment of a receiver.[5] Nor will a receiver be appointed where the mortgagee cannot recover his amount personally from the mortgagor.[6] On this principle it has been held that a receiver cannot be appointed of the other properties of the mortgagor where there is no likelihood of a personal decree being passed against the mortgagor in case the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property is found insufficient to satisfy the mortgage.[7] It has however been held in the undermentioned cases[8] that where a receiver is appointed at the instance of a mortgagee, the rents and profits of the property realised by the receiver must be treated as additional security for the amount found due to the mortgagee under the mortgage and that therefore the mortgagee is entitled to be paid out the rents and profits so received in priority to other personal creditors of the mortgagor.

Where the mortgage is void ab initio and the mortgagee obtains a simple money decree in respect of the mortgage amount it has been held by the High Court of Rangoon that he cannot apply for the appointment of a receiver of the properties of the mortgagor.[9] It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the Court has no power to appoint a receiver pending a suit for the specific performance of a contract to execute a mortgage.[10]

In the circumstances of the following cases, it has been held that a receiver may properly be appointed:—

(1) Where the interest due on the mortgage is in arrears or the sale proceeds of the property are likely to be insufficient to satisfy the mortgage.[11]

(2) Where the mortgage is by the karta of a joint Hindu family and it is found that such a mortgage is binding on the family.[12]

(3) Where the suit is to enforce a floating charge on the good-will and the stock-in-trade of a business under a mortgage containing a proviso that the mortgagor should not permit the stock-in-trade to fall below a certain value.[13]

(4) Where the mortgagor who is in possession on behalf of the mortgagee becomes insolvent.[14]

(5) Where the mortgagee is entitled to enter into possession on default of payment of the mortgage moneys.[15]

(6) Where the mortgagor, transfers his properties, with the mortgagee's consent, to trustees who undertake to liquidate his debts by periodical payments but the arrangement fails.[16]

A receiver can be appointed in a mortgage suit for sale even though a receiver has already been appointed in a prior partition suit comprising such property.[17] Such appointment can be made even after the final decree in the mortgage suit is passed and at any time before the mortgage is fully satisfied.[18]

O. 40, R.1, Notes 4—7.

A receiver may thus be appointed after the sale under the mortgage decree and pending an application to set aside such sale.[19]

Where a receiver is appointed in a mortgage suit, the mortgagee, if in possession, must give up such possession to the receiver, even though, he has been in possession under an arrangement that he should apply the income of the property to the discharge of the debt.[20]

S. 69-A of the Transfer of Property Act which was introduced newly by Act. XX of 1929, now makes provision for the appointment of a receiver of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee himself in cases where he is entitled to sell the property without recourse to a suit for sale. Hence the undermentioned decision[21] passed prior to Act. XX of 1929, wherein this right was not recognised is no longer good law.

5. Receiver of future earnings of judgment-debtor, if can be appointed.—Apart from any charge given by the debtor, the Court has no power to appoint a receiver in aid of a judgment, of the future earnings of the judgment-debtor, inasmuch as such earnings are not property in respect of which the judgment-creditor could proceed in equity or at law.[1] A receiver cannot therefore be appointed to receive the maintenance allowance[1-a] or the pension payable to the judgment-debtor.[2] But where the latter has been given certain lands for his maintenance, a receiver can be appointed to collect the rents and profits of the lands and pay out of the same, a sufficient sum for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family applying the balance, if any, to the liquidation of the judgment-creditor's debt.[3] See also the undermentioned cases.[4]

The Court should look at the whole of the circumstances of each case.[3]

9. Maintenance suits.—Where by a decree for maintenance a charge is created on the defendant's property for the payment of maintenance, it is desirable, in order to facilitate execution and to avoid further litigation, that the decree itself should appoint a receiver with directions to take possession of the property, in case of default of payment and to sell the same, and to pay out of the proceeds of the sale the amount due to the plaintiff.[1]

P. Code interfere with the possession of a receiver appointed by a civil Court without the permission of that Court.[3]

ness is an indispensable qualification for a receiver.[2] Subject to the above general rule however in the case of partnership and partition suits, a party is more readily appointed a receiver than in other cases.[3] There is nothing to prevent a Hindu from being appointed receiver of the properties of a Muhammadan wakf where his duties do not include the performance of religious ceremonies.[4] Similarly the appointment of the guardian of a minor as receiver of his properties is not illegal.[5] But the attorney of a party to the litigation cannot be appointed receiver, as such appointment will interfere with the arrangement made by such party for the conduct of his case.[6]

The fact that the receiver lives far away from the properties is a disqualification, which, though not absolute, should be taken into consideration in making the appointment.[7]

12. What Court may appoint or remove a receiver.—Under S. 505 of the Code of 1882 a receiver could be appointed only by the High Courts and the District Courts and not by Courts subordinate to the District Court.[1] Under the present Code, a receiver can be appointed by all Courts. The appointment can be made only by the Court before which the suit wherein the receiver is sought to be appointed is pending, or where the decree has been appealed against, by the appellate Court.[2] Hence a District Court cannot appoint a receiver in a suit pending in a Court subordinate to it.[3] Now that the words "property, the subject of a suit or attachment" which occurred in S. 503 of the old Code have been omitted in the present rule, a Court can appoint a receiver even of property situated beyond its local jurisdiction,[4] and even before deciding the question of jurisdiction, where such question is raised.[5] A Court of Small Causes cannot appoint a receiver of immoveable property) (See Ss. 7 and 94 of the Code.[6]) A civil Court in the Punjab can appoint a receiver to collect the rent of agricultural land.[7]

Where a receiver of a certain property has already been appointed by a Court, it is inexpedient that another Court should appoint another receiver for the same property.[8] It is only the Court that appointed the receiver, that can remove him[9] or give him any directions in the matter.[10]

13. When a receiver may be appointed.—See also Note 6 to S. 51. As has been seen in Note 2, ante, the appointment of a receiver is in the judicial discretion of the Court. Where the property is in medio, i.e., in the possession of no one, a receiver can readily be appointed. But where any one is in possession under a legal claim, strong reasons are necessary for interfering with his possession. [See Notes 14 and 48, infra, where the general principles are discussed. See also sub-R. (2).]

A plaintiff applying for the appointment of a receiver must show prima facie that he has a strong case and good title to the property[1] or a special equity in his favour[2] that the property in the hands of the defendant is in danger of being wasted.[3] The distinction between the appointment of a receiver and temporary injunction is this. While in either case, it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, it is enough to show in an application for injunction that the plaintiff has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, but this is not enough for the appointment of a receiver, a good prima facie title has to be made out.[4] The mere fact that the plaintiff in his plaint makes violent and wholesale charges of malversation against the defendant in possession is no ground for the appointment of a receiver.[5] Nor is a mere future apprehension of misappropriation or mismanagement sufficient ground for the appointment.[6] Vague charges against the person in possession are not enough; the charges must be specific.[7] Persons in possession under a legal claim must not be removed on the strength of mere suspicion.[8] In a suit for possession and mesne profits against a defendant who claims to hold the property as trustee, the mere fact that the defendant is a poor man from whom it would be impossible to realise any mesne profits which might be decreed, is no ground for appointing a receiver where there is no allegation of misappropriation or waste.[9] But in the undermentioned cases, the insolvency of the person in possession of the disputed property was held to be good ground for the appointment of a receiver.[10]

A receiver cannot be appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the real income of a property so that the Court may have correct data for fixing the rate of maintenance payable to a widow.[11] The allegation against a defendant, a trustee, that since his acceptance of office, he has not paid allowances to the beneficiaries, without any allegation of waste or mismanagement, etc., is no ground for appointing a receiver in his place.[12] Nor should a receiver be appointed merely because the relations between the parties are strained[13] or because the manager of the estate of the defendant produces his accounts and documents late.[14] But where the defendant removes under suspicious circumstances, a large extent of property during the pendency of a suit, in which the title to the property is to be determined,[15] or where a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate is found to be wasting the property[16] or where a life tenant intends to transfer the estate to a stranger thus constituting a danger to the reversionary interests,[17] a receiver may be properly appointed. In a suit for possession, where it is clearly proved that the estate is grossly mismanaged and wasted, a receiver should be appointed.[18] It is not necessarily improper that a receiver should be appointed to deal with the rents and profits of land assigned to a Hindu widow for her maintenance, even if she has no other source of income.[19] The mere fact that the party in possession is a Muhammadan widow claiming a lien for her dower debt, is no bar to the appointment of a receiver if there are good grounds for such appointment.[20] See also the undermentioned cases.[21]

A receiver may be appointed in a suit for a declaration[22] or in a mere suit for money.[23] But in such cases the creditor must establish a special equity in his favour.[24] The High Court of Calcutta has however held that a simple creditor without charge on the property is not entitled to ask for the appointment of a receiver.[24-a] A receiver can be appointed to collect the rents and profits of an estate which is itself not liable to attachment.[25] The mere fact that the acts alleged against the defendant constitute a crime for which he may be prosecuted is no bar to the appointment.[26] An application for the appointment of a receiver should always be made promptly. Delay in making it is a circumstance unfavourable to such appointment.[27] An application for the appointment of a receiver should not be dismissed summarily. The matter should be considered judicially in all its aspects before being disposed of. The dismissal of an application, at a prior stage when the suit itself was dismissed does not prevent a subsequent application when the suit has been restored and the proceedings re-opened.[28]

14. "Just and convenient".—The provisions of English Law corresponding to this rule (S. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, now S. 45 of the Judicature Act, 1925) use the words "just or convenient". But they have been interpreted to mean "just and convenient" even in England.[1] S. 503 of the old Code restricted the power of the Court in making the appointment of a receiver, to certain specific purposes[2] but the present rule has brought it into a line with the powers exercised by the English Courts under the English Law.[3] Courts in India have therefore the fullest jurisdiction to appoint or remove a receiver in the exercise of their judicial discretion.[4] The principles by which the Court of Chancery in England was guided in appointing a receiver before the judicature Acts (and which were, only given effect to by the judicature Acts) are thus stated by Lord Cranworth, L.C., as follows:—

"The receiver, if appointed in this case, must be appointed on the principle on which the Court of Chancery acts, of preserving property pending litigation which is to decide the right of the litigant parties. In such cases the Court must, of necessity, exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not take possession of the property by its officer . . . . where, indeed, the property is, as it were, in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble . . . . But when the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the enjoyment, the case is necessarily involved in further questions. The Court, by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the defendant; in some cases an irreparable wrong. If the plaintiff should eventually fail in establishing his right against the defendant, the Court may, by its interim interference, have caused mischief to the defendant, for which the subsequent restoration of the property may afford no adequate compensation."[5]

The principles followed by the English Courts of equity should be adopted as safe guides by the Courts in India in these matters.[6] The discretion conferred by this rule should therefore not be exercised in an arbitrary or unregulated manner but cautiously, judicially and according to legal principles[7] after a consideration of the whole of the circumstances of the case.[8] A receiver cannot be appointed merely because it is expedient or convenient to the mortgagee to do so,[9] or because it will do no harm to do so.[10] The bona fide possessor of the property in dispute should not be disturbed by the appointment of a receiver unless there is some substantial ground for such interference,[11] such as a well founded fear that the property in question will be dissipated or that other irreparable mischief may be done unless the Court gives its protection.[12] As has been said already in Note 13, ante the Court will refuse to interfere unless the applicant establishes some special equity in his favour.[13]

ing interference by the Court.[2] The mere fact that there is a dispute as to the share to which the plaintiff is entitled[3] or that the relations between the parties are strained[4] is no ground for appointing a receiver. Nor is a mere apprehension of future waste sufficient for that purpose.[4-a] There should be some specific act of misappropriation, malversation, or mismanagement shown; and this principle is practically to be applied in the case of partition of Hindu Joint family property in the hands of the eldest brother who is the manager of the property.[5] But this rule does not apply when one co-owner occupies the whole property and excludes the other co-owners from their shares of the rents and profits of the property. In such a case, a receiver may be appointed although no waste or malversation by the co-owner in possession is proved.[6] The Court may also allow the party in sole occupation to elect to pay to the other co-owners an occupation rent or may require him to furnish security for the shares of the rents and profits of the other parties.[7]

A receiver may be appointed in a partition suit at the instance of the creditors of the co-parceners.[8] A receiver in a partition suit is entitled to require payment of rent from the party who is in possession of an important item of the family property in suit.[9]

16. Executor in possession.—In England the rule is that the Court will not interfere with the possession of an executor of a will by appointing a receiver except where a case of gross misconduct is established against the executor.[1] In India also, very strong reasons are necessary to appoint a receiver in such a case.[2] (See the undermentioned cases[3] for instances in which a receiver was appointed.) But in the case of a Muhammadan will the executor is not entitled to the same degree of protection from interference as is given by the English Law, and a receiver can more readily be appointed in displacement of such an executor than in the case of the executor of a will made by other persons.[4] This is because a Muhammaden can dispose of by his will only a third of his property and the reason for the English rule, viz., that the executor is a person enjoying in a marked degree the testator's confidence and as such should not be lightly interfered with, does not apply with the same force to the executor of a Muhammadan will.

17. Receiver, if can be appointed for a company.—A Court cannot appoint a receiver of a company except in a debenture holder's action when the business and assets of the company are charged with payment of the claims of the debenture-holders. If it is necessary to protect the assets of a company, the appropriate action must be taken under the provisions of the Companies Act.[1]

18. Appointment if can be made after reference to arbitration.—A receiver can be appointed after a suit has been referred to arbitration unless the Court finds that the reference included also the question of interim management.[1] He can be appointed even in the interval between the submission of an award and the final acceptance or rejection of it.[2]

19. Receiver in Execution proceedings.—The appointment of a receiver is prescribed by S. 51 of the Code as one of the modes of executing a decree. This rule prescribes the conditions and limitations under which such appointment is to be made. Reading S. 51 with this rule, as it ought to be, it is clear that the Court can appoint a receiver in execution proceedings only when it considers just and convenient to do so.[1] The decree-holder's consent is, however not necessary for such appointment.[2] Nor can he, as of right and as a matter of course apply for execution by the appointment of a receiver.[2-a]

Although in India where there is no distinction between law and equity it is not always necessary that legal execution should be exhausted before equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver is made, such appointment is not to be resorted to when there is no impediment to execution being levied in the ordinary way as provided by the Code; the person seeking equitable execution must show that he was met by difficulties arising from the nature of the property which prevented his obtaining relief by the usual modes of execution and that it is necessary and advantageous to appoint a receiver.[3] The mere fact that the defendants belong to an old family and that, unless the Court steps in and saves them from the consequences of their debts they may be ruined, is not, in itself, a sufficient ground for such appointment.[4]

A receiver should not be appointed where it would unduly delay the realisation of the decree debt.[5] In execution of a decree against a legal representative of a judgment-debtor a receiver cannot be appointed of properties which do not form part of the assets of the deceased;[6] nor can he be appointed where such appointment has the effect of depriving one of the legal representatives of the entire profits from the portion of the estate in his hands without anything being left even for the maintenance of himself and his family while the other legal representatives who are in enjoyment of substantial portion of the deceased's estate were left scot-free.[7]

Where the decretal debt will be equally and as surely satisfied by the appointment of a receiver as in any other way and at the same time the judgment-debtor will be saved from great prospective loss, the Court can appoint a receiver.[8] Such an appointment can also be made where the interests of both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor can be safeguarded and where such appointment appears to be the only way in which the decree-holder can hope to realise any appreciable part of his dues.[9] Thus where a decree has been obtained against trust property and such property cannot be sold in execution of the decree,[10] or where the debts and rents due to the judgment-debtor are sought to be attached in execution of the decree and the person owing the same denies his liability to the judgment-debtor[11] or where a decree in favour of the judgment-debtor is attached in execution of the decree in favour of his decree-holder[12] a receiver can properly be appointed. See also the undermentioned case,[13] where a receiver was appointed to sell a colliery directed to be sold by the decree so as to safeguard the interests of all parties.

The appointment of a receiver in execution does not operate as a stay of execution so as to disentitle the decree-holder from executing his decree in respect of the same debt in any manner provided by the Code. The mere fact that the decree-holder consented to the appointment does not estop him from subsequently seeking to enforce his decree by execution.[15]

20. Receiver after decree.—The words "whether before or after decree" are new and make it clear that a receiver can be appointed even after a decree has been passed in the suit.[1] These words have given effect to the undermentioned case[2] under the former Code. A receiver can be appointed even after execution sale and before its confirmation[3] or after the grant of leave to appeal to the Privy Council.[4] But the Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver when there is no litigation pending before it, in which such appointment can be made. Thus no receiver can be appointed after a suit has been dismissed[5] or compromised[6] or after the decree has been satisfied.[7]

21. Receiver of property in the hands of a common manager.—Under this rule a receiver, can be appointed for property in the hands of a common manager under S. 95 of The Bengal Tenancy Act.[1] A receiver can also be appointed pending proceedings for the appointment of a common manager.[2] A Civil Court can appoint a receiver of property in respect of which proceedings for the appointment of a common manager are pending before the District Judge.[3]

22. Powers of a receiver.—A receiver has no powers except what have been conferred on him expressly or impliedly, by the Court.[1] His powers are therefore conditioned by the terms of his appointment subject to any subsequent modification by the Court.[2] In the absence, therefore, of any provision, express or implied, as to the powers conferred on him there is no presumption that all the powers mentioned in Cl. (d) of the rule are conferred on him[3] and he cannot deal with the property of which he is the receiver, in any way without the consent of the Court.[4] Thus he has no power to lease out debutter property without the sanction of the Court.[5] Even if full powers are conferred on the receiver, he should take the directions of the Court in all important matters if he wishes to have complete protection for himself.[6]

A receiver who has been given all the powers mentioned in Cl. (d) will have impliedly a discretionary power of sale.[7] The authority will also include a power to give notice to quit or to sue for compensation for use and occupation without the special leave of the Court.[8] A general power of management will include a power to exercise the powers of a proprietor under Madras Act, II of 1894.[9] A bona fide acknowledgment of a debt by the receiver is an acknowledgment by an authorised person which will extend the period of limitation under S. 19 of the Limitation Act.[10] But a receiver, can have, at the most, only such powers and rights over the property as the parties to the suit are found to possess when their rights are finally determined.[11] Any misrepresentation or concealment of material facts from the Court in connection with a proposed transaction by the receiver would vitiate the authority conferred on the receiver.[12] Nor can a clause be added to a lease granted by the receiver subsequent to the grant of the sanction, if it was not mentioned in the terms proposed in the application for sanction.[13] When property is sold by a receiver in auction under the directions of the Court, the sale is as much a Court sale as an execution in the usual course, and is therefore not complete till it is confirmed by the Court.[14] Nor can it be attacked by the parties collaterally.[15] In the case of a private sale by the receiver, a right of pre-emption can be exercised to the same extent as if the sale was by the owner himself.[16]

O. 40, R. 1, Notes 22—23.

A Court has no power to confer on the receiver any fresh power such as a liberty to sell after the suit has been dismissed.[17] It is also irregular for the Court to order payment of the debts of any party from the estate before the ascertainment of the estate. In exceptional cases, as where a plaintiff applies for payment to the creditors from out of the estate in the hands of the receiver, payments might be ordered out of the share of the plaintiff, where such share is admitted and it is more than enough to satisfy the debts of the creditors, subject to the plaintiff later on proving that there are liabilities of the estate and as such must come out of the whole estate.[18] No Court, other than that by which the receiver was appointed can make or give any directions to the receiver as supplementary to those given by the appointing Court.[19] A mortgage by the receiver under the Court's order, directing that it should be entitled to priority over the pre-existing charges, takes precedence over such mortgages as a salvage lien.[20] See also Note 42 below.

23. "All such powers as to bringing or defending of suits as the owner himself has".—A right to sue is not necessarily incidental to the general powers of a receiver[1] and does not exist unless it has been conferred on him expressly or by necessary implication.[2] It depends solely on the order of the Court and not on the wishes of the parties.[3] A Court can expressly authorise the receiver to sue in his own name.[4] But such an authority may also be given impliedly. Thus a receiver who is given the same powers of suing and defending suits as the owner himself has, is entitled to sue in his own name though not expressly authorised to do so.[5] Similarly, a receiver appointed to collect outstandings can sue in his name.[6] On the appointment of a receiver with the requisite powers he is the only person competent to bring suits and obtain decrees. Hence, after such a receiver has been appointed for an estate the landlord cannot sue for rent.[7]

Though ordinarily a suit for possession can only be instituted by a person having a present title to such possession, and though by his appointment no property vests in a receiver, he is entitled to sue for possession if he is given by the Court all the requisite powers.[8] In a suit brought by the receiver within his authority, the defendant cannot question the validity of his appointment as receiver.[9] Where, however, after the appointment of the receiver, the property is sold in Court auction to a third person, and a sale certificate issued to him, the authority to sue for possession of that property must be taken to be withdrawn from the receiver and he cannot therefore sue for possession of that property. The only person who could sue therefor is the auction-purchaser.[9-a] A receiver's discretion to spend money in litigation ought not to be interfered with by the appellate Court; the Court of first instance, will, if necessary take security from him for restitution of such expenses in certain events.[10]

It was held in the undermentioned case[11] a receiver of a Zamindari was entitled to sue for sums spent by the Zamindar at the defendant's request before the appointment of the receiver as it was found that the claim arising out of such expenditure was one annexed to the estate.

24. Realisation of property.—A receiver appointed to get in and realise the estate of a deceased person and to pay debts has a power of sale also.[1] Similarly, a receiver of mortgaged properties in respect of which mortgage decrees have been passed, who has been given powers of realisation, management, protection and preservation of the property has a discretionary power of sale.[2] But a receiver empowered to collect outstandings and do all things necessary for the realisation and preservation of the assets of a firm, has no power to mortgage the property of the firm.[3] A receiver of debts due to a judgment-debtor can take legal proceedings by way of suit or execution proceedings to collect the outstandings.[4] A receiver, however, cannot recover property sold away by the judgment-debtor, on the ground of the sale being voidable under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.[5] Rent accrued due to the estate prior to the appointment of the receiver is not part of the estate in his hands, and therefore a payment to the proprietor on account of such liability is a sufficient discharge of the debt.[6] For further information, see Notes 22 and 23, supra.

25. Collection of the rents and profits thereof.—A receiver appointed to collect the rents of land cannot raise the rent.[1] A receiver appointed in respect of property under attachment, has the powers of the owner as they existed at the time the property was brought under the orders of the Court by attachment, provided they have not ceased by operation of law. Hence, where, subsequent to the attachment but before the appointment of the receiver, the landlord had reduced the rate of rent payable by the tenant, the receiver was held entitled to recover rent at the original rate.[2]

26. Power as to the execution of documents as the owner himself has.—When a receiver sells a property under the orders of the Court, he should be a party to the deed of conveyance.[1] A receiver in an administration suit cannot sell in satisfaction of a mortgage executed by one of the claimants of the estate before the administration is complete.[2] A conveyance of the property by a receiver acting within his authority binds all the persons entitled to share in the estate including minors.[3]

27. Delegation of duty by receiver.—A receiver being an officer of the Court, is responsible to the Court for the due discharge of his duties. He is not entitled to delegate to another any of the duties entrusted to him by the Court,[1] or assign to another for valuable consideration any of his rights as receiver.[1-a] Not having any proprietary interest in the estate under his control, he cannot assign his rights to another so as to enable the latter to enforce them as such assignee.[2] As to whether and under what circumstances, a receiver is entitled to have clerks and agents to assist him See Notes 35 and 42 below.

28. The receiver is an officer of the Court.—A receiver is an officer of the Court. He is also "a public officer" within the meaning of S. 2, Cl. 17.[1] He is nothing more than the hand of the Court for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court, in order to preserve the subject-matter of the suit pendente lite.[1-a] He is a representative of the Court and not of any of the parties to the suit, though he holds the property for the benefit of those ultimately found to be rightful owners.[2] Thus, a receiver in execution proceedings is not the agent of the judgment-creditor and moneys realised by the receiver do not become ipso facto moneys belonging to the judgment-creditor.[3] (See Note 33, infra.) A receiver's possession being that of the Court, no one is entitled to interfere with it.[4] A sale of property by the receiver has the same effect as a sale by the Court and the purchaser is entitled to the assistance of the Court in obtaining possession of the property so purchased.[5] A receiver, though an officer of the Court, is not a judicial officer. Hence, a Court has no power to delegate to a receiver the duty of enquiring into the claims of rival claimants to the property.[6]

A receiver should not be allowed to purchase the property of which he is the receiver[7] and such a sale if made would be voidable by an application made under S. 47 of the Code.[8]

29. Possession of the receiver enures for the benefit of the true owner.—The possession of the receiver is the possession of the Court, and the possession of the Court by the receiver is the possession of all the parties to the action according to their titles. The property passes into legal custody (custodia legis) and such custody is for the benefit of the true owner. The receiver thus holds the property for the benefit of those ultimately found to be the true owners.[1] By the appointment of a receiver the Court takes upon itself the management of the property during the continuance of the litigation. But the proprietary right or interest in the property is not transferred from the rightful owner either to the Court or to the receiver appointed by it[2]. The receiver's possession being possession on behalf of all the parties to the action according to their titles none of them can claim to be in adverse possession during the continuance of the receiver's possession against the party ultimately found entitled to the property.[3] Nor is it open to the receiver during the continuance of the receivership to set up a title in himself adverse to that of the parties. Even if the receiver is discharged he would still hold the property on behalf of the rightful owner.[4] Thus the title of the real owner is in no way affected either in theory or principle, by the appointment of a receiver. A payment made by a receiver out of the funds of an estate is equivalent to a payment made by the owner of the estate and where he would be entitled to get reimbursement from a third person if he had made the payment himself, he would be equally entitled to such reimbursement if the payment is made by the receiver.[5] If despite the appointment of the receiver, the defendant continues in possession, he can be sued by the true owner for the profits misappropriated by him.[6]

The appointment of a receiver does not supersede a prior attachment of the property.[7]

When the owner of a property is himself appointed receiver he does not lose his rights as a proprietor of dealing with the property during the receivership except that he cannot impair the value of the property in his hands or cause interference with his possession of the property as receiver.[8]

30. Attachment of properties in the hands of receiver.—Property in the hands of a receiver, being really property in the possession of the Court, it is, as a general rule, exempt from judicial process except to the extent permitted by the Court appointing such receiver. In other words the possession of the Court is not to be interfered with by taking any judicial proceedings against the property in the receiver's hands without the permission of the Court.[1] Hence leave of Court is necessary for execution of a decree by attachment and sale of property in the hands of the receiver.[2]

Such leave is necessary even where the property is sought to be proceeded against in execution of a mortgage decree, although no attachment is necessary for sale in such a case.[3] The High Court of Calcutta is, however, of opinion that as no attachment is necessary in the case of a sale under a mortgage decree, the permission of the Court is not necessary for such a sale.[4] Even where an attachment was levied on property before the appointment of the receiver, it is within the discretion of the appointing Court, to refuse to permit a sale of property under such attachment, and a purchaser in Court auction at a sale held without the previous permission of the Court, buys at his peril, as the sale may be cancelled.[5] Permission is necessary even for an application for rateable distribution against the receiver.[5-a]

A sale of property in the hands of a receiver without the leave of the Court, is however, not void but is only voidable, i.e., it is valid until set aside by appropriate proceedings. If the persons interested do not impeach the sale, it is not open to others to do so.[6] It has even been held that the sale cannot be set aside if the person seeking to have it set aside has in no way been prejudiced by the sale.[7]

But where a decree obtained by a receiver is attached without the Court's permission and is then transferred by the receiver to a third person who takes the assignment in good faith and without knowledge of the attachment, the attachment being irregular does not affect the title of the assignee.[7-a]

Though a receiver of a property may have been appointed, yet, until he actually takes possession of the property a stranger decree-holder is not precluded from executing his decree against the property without obtaining the leave of the Court.[8]

The proper Court to permit the attachment of property in the hands of a receiver is the Court by which the receiver has been appointed.[9]

As to the effect of subsequent grant of leave, see Note 31, infra.

31. Suits by or against receiver—Leave of Court.—See also Note 43, infra.

A receiver can neither sue nor be sued without the leave of the Court.[1] He is merely an officer of the Court and not the representative of the owner of the estate. Hence, no cause of action vests in him and he has no locus standi to sue except with the leave of the Court.[2] "There is no statutory provision which requires a party to take the leave of the Court to sue a receiver. The rule has come down to us as a part of the rules of equity, binding upon all English Courts of Justice in this country. It is a rule based upon public policy which requires that when the Court has assumed possession of a property in the interests of the litigants before it, the authority of that Court is not to be obstructed by suits designed to disturb the possession of the Court. The institution of such suits is in the eye of the law a contempt of the authority of the Court and therefore the party contemplating such a suit is required to take the leave of the Court so as to absolve himself from that charge. The grant of such leave is made not in the exercise of any power conferred by statute, but in the exercise of the inherent power, which every Court possesses to prevent acts which constitute or are akin to an abuse of its authority.[3]

A Court will however, readily grant leave to sue the receiver if it is satisfied that there is a case to be tried so that the claim of the third party may be tried in the presence of the receiver.[4]

The omission to obtain the sanction of the Court prior to the institution of the suit can be rectified by leave granted subsequent to the institution of the suit.[5] In the undermentioned cases[6] however, it was held that the Court's sanction was a condition precedent to institution of the suit and the defect due to the want of such sanction could not be rectified by leave obtained subsequently. A suit against a receiver without the leave of the Court is liable to be dismissed.[7] If a decree is passed in such a suit it can be set aside.[8] The absence of an objection by the receiver, that no leave was obtained, will not entitle the Court to pass a decree against a receiver.[9] But where the receiver has been discharged[9-a] or has ceased to exist and has been replaced by the heirs of one of the parties who were on the record[10] the objection that the suit against the receiver was instituted without the leave of the Court will not stand. The leave of the Court is not necessary for a suit against a receiver, under S. 85 of the Madras Act, VIII of 1865.[11]

It is the Court appointing the receiver that can grant leave for the institution of a suit by or against the receiver. The Court trying the suit cannot grant it.[12] A Court does not by granting leave to sue the receiver relinquish its possession of the property to the Court in which the suit against the receiver is instituted.[13] The Court trying such suit cannot issue an injunction against the receiver restraining him from dealing with the property as it would lead to a conflict of jurisdictions.[14] Nor can a Court other than the appointing Court issue a rubkar to the latter Court requesting it to restrain the receiver from taking possession of a part of the property in respect of which the receiver has been appointed.[15] The proper course for a person who has obtained a decree against the receiver is to apply to the Court by which he has been appointed, to direct the receiver to act according to the decree.[16]

A receiver is not a necessary party to a suit for declaration of title and possession in respect of the property in the receiver's hands. The decree passed in such a suit can always be carried out against the property in the hands of the receiver with the leave of the Court appointing him, although he has not been made a party to the suit.[17] (See also Note 44, infra.)

A receiver appointed by a Civil Court is not a necessary party to proceedings in respect of the property under S. 145 of the Criminal Procedure

Code.[18] A Criminal Court has no jurisdiction in such proceedings to interfere with the possession of a receiver appointed by a Civil Court, without the permission of such Court.[19]

An owner of an estate cannot sue for accounts a Jaherdar appointed by the receiver. There is no fiduciary relation between the receiver and the owner, which is essential for such an action.[20] Similarly, a present receiver cannot sue a former receiver of the estate for recovery of money alleged to be due by the latter to the estate for breach of duty committed by him as receiver.[21]

32. Debts incurred by receiver in the course of business.—A receiver is personally liable in respect of debts incurred or contracts entered into by him in the course of his management of the estate, but he is entitled to indemnity from the estate for such debts.[1] The creditors can also proceed against the estate for the recovery of such debts in priority to other creditors of the estate, the principle being that as the acts of the receiver acting within his authority are the acts of the Court, the estate cannot be permitted to enjoy the benefits of those acts without being held liable for the obligation arising therefrom.[2] The ordinary rule that the creditors who have advanced money to a receiver for the management of the estate can proceed against him personally does not apply where the advance has been expressly made on the condition that the estate alone should be liable.[3]

33. Loss caused by receiver's default.—The receiver is not the agent or representative of any party to the suit. If therefore loss arises from the default of the receiver, such loss, subject to the receiver's liability for his default, must be borne by the estate and not by the party at whose instance he was appointed receiver.[1] But in the undermentioned case,[2] a Full Bench of the Oudh Chief Court has held that where a receiver in execution, misappropriates the moneys paid by the judgment-debtor, the loss should be borne by the decree-holder and not the judgment-debtor, the reason given being that the payment to the receiver absolves the judgment-debtor from all further responsibility.

34. Agreement with receiver—Contempt of Court.—It is only the Court that can control the powers of the receiver. As an officer of the Court, he has only such powers as the Court chooses to give him. It is a contempt of Court for any one else to enter into an agreement with the receiver restricting and controlling his powers.[1] Similarly, a promise by a party to pay remuneration to a receiver is against Law and not enforceable.[2]

A receiver also can apply for process for contempt of Court against any one interfering with his possession.[3]

35. Remuneration of receiver.—Under R. 2, infra, the Court has the power of fixing the receiver's remuneration. Such remuneration is generally by way of percentage or commission but there is no absolute rule that he should be so remunerated. The Court has a discretion if it thinks fit, to allow him remuneration at a fixed rate.[1] The receiver is also entitled to all reasonable expenses of management[1-a] including the fees of counsel whom he may have to engage.[2] (See Note 42, infra for further information.) An agreement by a party to pay remuneration to the receiver is as has been observed in Note 34, ante against law and cannot be enforced.[3] The receiver's remuneration must come out of the estate and the parties are not personally liable for it.[4] The managing partner of a firm by consenting to act without remuneration as receiver during the dissolution of the partnership, does not forego his rights to such remuneration as he would be entitled to as managing partner.[5]

The receiver of mortgaged property is entitled to priority over the mortgagee in respect of his remuneration and the expenses properly incurred by him in the course of his management.[6] But the priority does not extend to the wages that became due to a servant of the estate before the appointment of the receiver.[7]

36. Liability of receiver.—See R. 3, infra. The receiver is liable to duly account for the income and the properties that come into his hands. He is responsible for any loss occasioned to the property by his wilful default and gross negligence. See Note 32, supra for the receiver's liability for debts incurred by him in the course of the management of the estate. A receiver disregarding the Court's orders is liable to be removed[1] or committed for contempt in case he is appointed by a High Court.[2] (For further information, see next Note.)

37. Liability to account.—In Mohini Mohan Patra v. Baroda Kanta Sarkar.[1] Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court expressed themselves as follows:—

"The receiver is but an officer of the Court appointing him, and is, therefore, bound to account to that Court for all property which he has received. It is his duty to keep his accounts and vouchers in such condition that they will be ready for examination at any time; and, as a general proposition, whenever property or funds come into the hands of a receiver pending litigation, the Court may require him to report his acts and doings and to render an account, in order to ascertain the condition of the property and to enable the Court to settle the rights of, and do justice to, all the litigant parties. When the accounts of the receiver come up for adjustment, he is a party in interest, entitled to be heard, and it is the duty of the Court to see that his rights are protected. But so, also, all other interested parties are entitled to notice and an opportunity to attend and be heard. All persons having an interest in the estate which the receiver represents, have the right to be present, and be examined on any subject pertinent to the inquiry which springs out of the proceedings itself, and to take exception to the receiver's accounts. Courts are disposed to hold receivers to great strictness in rendering their accounts, and a thorough investigation of the accounts and vouchers is proper where, as here, the rights of infants are involved. A receiver is bound to exercise the same degree of diligence in keeping down expenses and in caring for the estate in his possession as a prudent man would observe in connection with his own property under similar circumstances. A receiver, therefore, will not ordinarily be permitted, without the sanction and authority of the Court, to incur any expenditure which will seriously diminish the funds entrusted to his charge, and it is his duty if he wishes to protect himself, to apply to the Court for instructions as to the expenditure, and to keep regular accounts of all items of receipts and expenditures. . . . . It does not, however, follow that in every case in which the receiver neglects to obtain an order of the Court authorising a particular payment out of the fund in his possession, he will be denied reimbursement. . . . . . Where a receiver has laid out money without a previous order of Court, and the transaction is proved by him to have been beneficial to the parties in interest, he is entitled to be allowed credit in his accounts for the amount thus expended."

A receiver must produce vouchers for all payments other than petty sums,[2] but when produced they will be evidence of the payment of the sums therein specified and credit will be given for such sums to the accounting party in the account unless it is shown that there are reasonable grounds for impeaching the vouchers.[3] A receiver can be required to submit his accounts for scrutiny even after the suit has been dismissed[4] and even after his discharge.[5] He is responsible not only for sums actually received by him but also for all such sums which he might have received but for his default or negligence.[6] A party appointed receiver is liable to account in the same way as a stranger so appointed.[7]

It is not right, when considering the accounts submitted by the receiver, to go into the question of the liability to account for periods other than the period covered by the account itself.[8] Nor does the question of bad management by the receiver arise when he submits his accounts for being passed.[9]

The accounts of the receiver can be examined only by the Court appointing him.[10] And where it has over-ruled the objections of a party impugning the accounts and passed them, a suit will not lie against the receiver for damages for negligence, etc., based on allegations which have already been considered and overruled by the Court.[11]

See also Note 3 to R. 3, infra.

38. Liability of receiver and that of an executor or trustee.—A trustee or executor is not personally liable for debts incurred by him in the course of the management of the estate, but a receiver is personally liable for such debts.[1]

39. Liability to criminal prosecution.—A receiver of property cannot be prosecuted for criminal breach of trust in respect of the property without the sanction of the Court appointing him.[1] The same rule applies to any other offence committed by the receiver in his capacity of receiver.[2] But where the offence committed by the receiver has nothing to do with the office held by him the Court's sanction is not necessary for his prosecution.[3]

40. When appointment takes effect.—Where the order appointing a person as receiver requires him to give security so that the order is conditional on the security being given, the appointment is not complete till such security is given.[1] But the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has held in the undermentioned case[2] that the appointment of the receiver is complete on the passing of the order of appointment although he may not be able to take actual possession of the property until security is approved.

Where there is no direction as to security and the order appointing the receiver is unconditional, it takes effect immediately it is made.[3] But the transfer of the property to the receiver's possession, actual or constructive, and the confirment of special powers on him require specific orders under Cls. (b), (c) and (d) of the rule.[4]

41. Security to be given by receiver.—R. 3, infra requires a receiver inter alia, to furnish such security as the Court thinks fit. As to whether the appointment of a receiver is complete before the payment of security, see Note 40.

42. Receiver's lien.—A receiver has a lien on the estate for all his just claims and allowances.[1] "On this principle it follows that a Court will not compel a receiver who has been discharged, to make over the property in his possession until his lien has been satisfied or provided for by a sufficient indemnity".[2]

43. Remedy of third party aggrieved by receiver's action.—A third person feeling aggrieved by the receiver's conduct has, ordinarily two remedies:—

(1) He may apply to the Court in the very suit in which the receiver has been appointed for a summary order against the receiver;

(2) He may, with the leave of such Court, sue the receiver.

The more proper and usual mode is by applying to the Court for summary relief. This is done by the aggrieved person applying to the Court for permission to come in and be examined pro interesse suo (for his own interest). If no question of title is involved and if the applicant has shown diligence, the Court will decide the matter on such an application. But otherwise, it will refer the third person to a separate suit against the receiver.[1] Where debatable questions, not easy to be dealt with at the passing of the receiver's accounts, are involved, the Court will decline to go into them in summary proceedings in the suit itself.[2]

O. 40, R.1,
44—46.

44. Receiver, if and when a necessary party to a suit.—In a suit for money against the representatives of a deceased person, the receiver holding possession of the deceased's estate is not a necessary party.[1] Nor is he a necessary party in every suit concerning the property of which he is the receiver.[2] Thus he is not a necessary party to a suit between third parties for declaration of title to, and possession of, the property in his charge.[3] In such cases, if the plaintiff obtains a decree he can go to the executing Court, obtain the leave of that Court to execute the decree against the property in his hands and then enforce the decree.[4] Where, however, the property in the hands of the receiver is intended to be affected by the result of the suit and the possession of the receiver or the jurisdiction of the Court is intended to be interfered with, leave of the Court must be obtained and the receiver made a party.[5] Thus the receiver is a proper party to proceedings for the sale of property in the receiver's hands in execution of a decree for sale on a mortgage.[6]

A receiver cannot be added as a party to proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Code.[7]

45. Notice to opposite party if necessary before appointment.—Notice to the other side is not indispensable in every case before a receiver is appointed. The very object of appointing a receiver may be defeated in many cases if notice were insisted on.[1] Hence, in emergent cases a receiver may be appointed without notice to the opposite side.[2] But except for very special reasons notice should not be excused before an order is made for such appointment.[3]

46. Appointment of new receiver in place of old receiver.—Where a receiver ceases to hold the office of receiver pending a suit filed by him, the suit does not abate but may be continued by his successor in office.[1] See Note 31, supra as to a present receiver's power to sue a former receiver for acts done by the latter during his tenure of office as receiver.

47. Joint receivers.—It is competent to a Court under this rule to appoint two or more persons as joint receivers of the same property. In such a case, the retirement or resignation of one of the receivers does not put an end to the order appointing a receiver.[1] In a partition suit where the Court ordered the plaintiff to be in charge of one portion of the suit properties and the defendant to be in charge of the remaining portion, it was held that the order was not ultra vires.[2] Ordinarily, it is not open to a Court to appoint a receiver when a receiver has already been appointed in respect of the same property by another Court.[3] But a receiver can be appointed in a mortgage suit where the decree is for sale although a receiver has already been appointed in respect of the same property in a prior partition suit.[4]

48. Duration of office of receivership.—A Court appointing a receiver may order that the office should continue permanently or for such period as is deemed necessary.[1] It can also cancel the order of appointment at any time if it considers it necessary.[2] Even if such appointment has been made with the consent of parties,[2-a] it has an inherent power to discharge or remove the receiver appointed by it.[3] But until otherwise ordered by the Court the receiver will continue in office[4] though the suit in which he has been appointed has come to an end but the purpose of his appointment has not been achieved.[5] A fortiori, a receiver in a partition suit is not discharged merely by the passing of a preliminary decree in the suit.[6] A receiver in an administration suit cannot ordinarily be discharged before the completion of the administration.[6-a]

A consent order of appointment of a receiver does not prevent a party from impugning the administration thereunder which is of such a character as to amount to a malfeasance or to be, in substance, so protracted and imperfect as to be futile.[7]

O. 40, R. 1, Notes 48—49.

The removal of a receiver is a matter of discretion to be exercised by the Court with care after due and proper enquiry. A receiver should not be dismissed summarily merely at the instance of one of the parties.[8] The burden of proving the circumstances justifying the removal is on the party applying for such removal.[9] Where incapacity on the part of the receiver is alleged it should be clearly proved.[10] A receiver may be removed for partiality.[11]

A Court which appoints a receiver has authority to pass orders necessary to wind up his charge even though the suit has been disposed of.[12] It can also examine the receiver's accounts and pass all necessary orders.[13]

Where the receivership is put an end to pending a suit filed by the receiver, the party ascertained to be the true owner can continue the suit.[14]

Where a claim for restitution is made on the cancellation of an order of appointment of a receiver, the Court will not, in ordering restitution, consider the fact that the receiver's appointment was to the applicant's advantage.[15]

Where any property in the receiver's possession is duly sold away to another, the receiver cannot be allowed to continue in possession.[16]

49. Court may remove any person from the possession or custody of property.—The rule empowers the Court to remove any person from the possession of property in respect of which a receiver has been appointed. The only case in which the receiver's possession can be resisted is that provided for by sub-R. (2) according to which the Court has no power to deprive a third person of the possession of any property when no party to the suit has a present right to do so.[1] When therefore a third person in possession of property in respect of which a receiver has been appointed objects to deliver possession to the receiver, the Court must hold an enquiry into his claim with a view to ascertain if he was under a present liability to be removed from the possession of the property.[2]

O. 40, R.1, Notes 49—50

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the person in possession of the property though he may have a right to continue in possession cannot interfere with the receiver but should apply to the Court for redress and that otherwise he will be guilty of contempt of Court.[3] According to the High Court of Patna on the other hand the third party in possession is not bound to deliver possession to the receiver pending the enquiry into his claim.[4]

Sub-R. (2) applies only to third persons in possession of the property and is no bar to the removal of any party to the suit, for possession.[5] Thus a mortgagee decree-holder who is in possession of the mortgaged property under an arrangement with the judgment-debtor for the liquidation of the mortgage debt is not entitled to possession as against a receiver who is subsequently appointed.[6]

The rule does not empower a Court to authorise a receiver to enter upon immovable property in the possession of another person without his consent, in order to take an inventory of such property as the plaintiff may indicate as the property in dispute.[7] The Court, instead of actually evicting the party in possession, may order him to pay the receiver a certain occupation rent.[8]

Sub-R. (1) (b) refers to the removal of persons other than the receiver. Hence, an order removing a receiver does not fall under Cl. (b).[9]

50. Summary jurisdiction.—A Court has power to enforce summarily a contract made by the receiver.[1] But where a lease has been granted by the receiver and the lessee has been put in possession, the lease cannot be set aside in summary proceedings.[2] Where a judgment-debtor took a sum of money from the receiver and refused to pay it back, it was held that the Court could order repayment and that such order could be enforced as a decree.[3] Although, ordinarily, proceedings for contempt are started at the instance of the parties and not of the receiver, there is nothing in law to prevent the receiver from applying for process for contempt.[4]

51. Appeal.—Under O. 43, R. 1 (s) an appeal lies from an order under O. 40, R. 1 or R. 4. An order under R. 1 may be one either appointing a receiver or may be one refusing to appoint a receiver. In either case the order will be appealable.[1] The High Court of Calcutta has, in Sripati Datta v. Bibhuti Bhusan Datta[2] held that the power to appoint includes a power to remove and that therefore an order removing the receiver is an order under O. 40, R. 1 and is therefore appealable. The same High Court has held however, in earlier cases[3] that a refusal to remove a receiver is not an order either under R. 1 or R. 4 and is not appealable. The same view has been held by the High Court of Madras.[4] The High Court of Allahabad has dissented from the Calcutta view in Sripati Datta's case and has held that an order removing a receiver from office is not appealable.[4-a]

O. 40, R. 1 is a general provision and even an order appointing or refusing to appoint a receiver in execution proceedings falls under O. 40, R. 1, and therefore is appealable as an appealable order and not as a decree.[5] The reason is that the definition of a "decree" in S. 2, sub-S. (2) does not include an appealable order though it may fall within the terms of S. 47. It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an order in execution proceedings refusing to remove a receiver comes within S. 47 of the Code and is appealable as a decree.[6]

It is only a final order of appointment or refusal that is appealable. Where an ex parte order is confirmed by a second order, an appeal lies only from the latter order.[7] An order appointing a receiver subject to his furnishing security is not complete or final till the security is given and is not appeal-able till then.[8] Suppose instead of actually appointing a receiver the Court simply makes an order that a receiver should be appointed adjourning the case to a future date does an appeal lie from such an order? Yes, according to the High Courts of Madras,[9] Lahore[10] and Patna.[11] No according to the High Courts of Allahabad,[12] Calcutta,[13] Bombay[14] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind.[15] An order merely expressing an intention of appointing a receiver and calling upon the parties to suggest names is not appealable.[16]

Where the effect of an order of appointment of a receiver and the directions given to him, is to remove any third person from the possession or custody of any property, it is an order under Cl. (b) of this rule and is open to appeal by such third party.[17] But a third party who is not in possession or custody of any property has no right of appeal against an order dismissing his objection to the appointment of a receiver inasmuch as there is no question of removing him from any possession of any property.[18]

An order under Cl. (d) of the rule giving directions as to the disposal of the income of the property, is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (s).[19] But an order giving certain directions to the receiver in passing his accounts, does not fall under this rule but under R. 3 and hence is not appealable.[20] There is no right of appeal in the following cases:—

(a) An order that the receiver is liable to account for only one year;[21]
(b) an order for the examination of the receiver's accounts;[22]
(c) an order granting leave to sue the receiver[23] and

(d) an order raising the receiver's remuneration.[24]

But an order passing the receiver's accounts[25] or an order that the receiver should pay into Court a sum of money for loss caused by his neglect and directing the security furnished by him to be proceeded against in default[25-a] will be one falling under R. 4 and will thus be appealable.

There is no right of appeal to the Privy Council from an order refusing to appoint a receiver.[26]

In an appeal from an order appointing or refusing to appoint a receiver the appellate Court will not lightly interfere with the discretion of the lower Court[27] except on the ground of some overwhelming objection in point of propriety or principle[28] or on the ground that the Court was proceeding on a wrong view of the facts[29] or has failed to exercise its discretion according to legal principles.[30] The burden of showing that interference is necessary, is on the appellant.[31] Pending an appeal from an order appointing a receiver, the appellate Court can direct the receiver through the lower Court not to take any steps in pursuance of his appointment.[32]

Only those persons who are materially prejudiced by the appointment of the receiver need be made parties to the appeal. Third persons not in possession of the property are not necessary parties thereto.[33]

A party who suggests names for the receivership is not thereby estopped from objecting to the appointment of a receiver in appeal.[34]

The undermentioned cases[35] under S. 505 of the old Code regarding the right to appeal against an order under that section are no longer of any practical importance under the present Code as that section has been repealed.

52. Letters Patent Appeal.—An order appointing a receiver under R. 1 is a "judgment" and is appealable under the Letters Patent.[1] But an order directing a receiver to advance money to a guardian ad litem to conduct the defence on behalf of a minor defendant is not a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent and no appeal lies from the order.[2]

53. Revision.—An order appointing a receiver in a case in which the Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, as for instance, in a proceeding under the Succession Certificate Act, can be set aside in revision by the High Court.[1] Where an objection of a third party in possession of the property, to the appointment of a receiver was dismissed it was held by the Patna High Court that the third party had no right of appeal but could apply for revision of the order dismissing the objection.[2] In the undermentioned case, it was held by the Madras High Court, that the refusal of a Court to join a receiver as a party to proceedings for the sale of property in his hands, in execution of a decree for sale on a mortgage, was a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction by the lower Court and that a revision lay.[3]

54. Practice.—Applications for the appointment of receivers should be made in the ordinary way by notice of motion in open Court and not in chambers.[1]

Inherent jurisdiction—Refund of receiver's charges and commission to successful party. See Note 1, Pt. (4).

1. Remuneration of receiver.—See also Note 35 to R. 1, ante.

A receiver being an officer of the Court, it is for the Court to determine his remuneration: an agreement without leave of the Court by a party to pay remuneration to the receiver is contrary to law and is not enforceable.[1] Where the managing partner of a partnership business consents to act as a receiver without remuneration and is appointed as receiver for the purpose of keeping the assets and profits and accounts of the partnership and for submitting proper accounts thereof, he does not, by such consent, forego his right to such remuneration as he would be entitled to for managing and carrying on the business.[2] A receiver is entitled to a commission on the collections made by him and cannot claim any commission where certain Government securities in deposit with a bank are converted under the authority of the Court, by the bank itself, into other securities issued by the Government.[3] Similarly where in a condiment business the receiver is ordered to retain 5 per cent. of the gross sale "proceeds" he cannot take such commission on "trade discounts" inasmuch as "proceeds" do not include trade discounts.[3-a] When a party is dismissed from an action as having been wrongly impleaded and the receivership of his property is cancelled, the Court has inherent jurisdiction to order restitution to be made to such party by ordering the plaintiff to refund to such party the commission and charges paid by him to the receiver.[4]

As to the remuneration of the receiver appointed under S. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, see the undermentioned case.[5]

2. Receiver's lien.—A receiver has a lien on the estate for all his just claims and allowances.[1] Where a receiver is sued for acts done by him as receiver for the benefit of the estate he is entitled to indemnity from the estate for the loss caused to him thereby.[2]

1. Security necessary—Cl. (a).—This rule provides for the duties of the receiver.[1] Though under the Code the Court has discretion to appoint a receiver without security, it should obviously be done only in the most exceptional circumstances.[2] Where the appellate Court directs the lower Court to appoint a receiver and take security from him but the lower Court appoints a receiver without taking any such security, the appointment cannot be said to be without jurisdiction.[3]

2. Liability of surety.—A surety for a receiver is liable to the payment of interest on balances improperly retained by him, as also for the costs of proceedings in Court necessarily or properly incurred in consequence of the receiver's default, such as the costs of a proceeding to take accounts, of an attachment for failure to account, of an application for his discharge and for the appointment of another person in his place, and of any proceedings taken to enforce the recognizance. receiver conditioned for the due discharge of his duties is, however, limited to cases of a violation of those duties which may properly be said to be within the scope of his appointment as receiver; in other words, the surety is responsible only in respect of liability incurred by the receiver in his capacity as receiver. To determine whether a particular liability has been incurred by the receiver in his capacity as receiver the test to be applied is, could the receiver be made accountable in that respect in the account proceedings? If he could not, the surety is not liable, if he could be held liable in that proceeding as receiver, the surety is also liable. But a surety who has satisfied the claim against the receiver is entitled to stand in the place of the receiver and to reimburse himself from the sums ordered to be paid to the receiver.[1]

3. Submission of accounts—Cl. (b).—See Note 37 to R. 1, supra.

The sanction of the Court is necessary for all expenditure of special nature incurred by the receiver.[1] A receiver is liable for all unauthorised expenditure incurred by him such as salaries of unnecessary servants appointed without the leave of the Court, bribe to the Police for obtaining the release of a minor of whose estate he is the receiver, and sums advanced to the minor owner of the estate in excess of the limit sanctioned by the Court.[2] Where litigation expenses are incurred by the receiver, the latter must show not merely that he paid the expenses but the details of such expenditure.[3]

The liability of a receiver, not appearing on the face of the accounts, such as for imprudent management, for wilful default or neglect, for the malpractices of his servants, etc., cannot be properly gone into on the receiver's application for the passing of his accounts. A separate suit is the more appropriate procedure for the investigation of such matters.[4]

Before passing an order for the attachment of the receiver's property under R. 4, the Court should examine the accounts under this rule and give him an opportunity to pay the amount found due by him.[5]

If, on an application to discharge a receiver, the latter puts forward a claim to a larger amount than what is due to him, and such amount is deposited in Court, he is liable, if such amount is found to be in excess of that actually due, to interest on the excess amount; but if the receiver's action has compelled the owner of the estate to borrow money at a higher rate than usual, the question of the receiver's liability in consequence of that fact should form the subject of a separate suit.[6]

No order can be passed against the receiver to make good the loss to the estate due to his gross negligence, till the passing of the accounts.[7]

O. 40, R. 3. Notes 4—5.

4. Responsibility for loss—Cl. (d).—A receiver appointed to collect the rents due to an estate must make good the loss caused to it by a breach of his duties. Thus if he delegates his duties to another (which he is not competent to do) and the latter misappropriates the funds collected by him[1] or if he fails to realise rents by taking proper proceedings he will be liable for the loss. Mistaken proceedings though taken in good faith will not absolve the receiver from liability. A decree-holder is not bound to accept pro-notes obtained by the receiver from the tenants, for the rents due and the receiver must make good the amounts of the rent not collected. Any loss arising from the default of the receiver will, as between the parties, devolve on the estate to which the appointment relates and not on the decree-holder at whose instance he may have been appointed.[1-a] A receiver is not entitled to recover the costs of proceedings, initiated by him through mistake.[2] A succeeding receiver cannot sue a former receiver for funds which he should have realised and accounted for.[3] Ordinarily creditors advancing money to a receiver for the purposes of management can proceed both against the estate and the receiver personally. But the receiver's personal liability may be expressly excluded by the terms of a particular loan.[4] A receiver's liability on account of his wilful default or neglect can more appropriately be investigated in a separate suit against him than in an application in the suit wherein he was appointed as receiver.[5] See Notes 31 to 33 to R. 1.

5. Appeal.—An order under this rule is not one that is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (s). Thus an order holding a receiver of an estate liable for a certain sum of money is not appealable. But where such an order is followed by another one under R. 4 for coercive action against the receiver, an appeal lies and in the appeal the prior order under R. 3 can be attacked.[1] An order directing the receiver to pay a certain sum of money as damages[2] or an order of the Court giving directions to the receiver in passing his accounts is not open to appeal.[3] No appeal lies against an order construing an order of appointment of receiver under R. 1.[4] Where a receiver is appointed subject to his furnishing security the appointment is not complete till security is given and till then there is no right of appeal.[5] See also Note 51 to R. 1.

An order under this rule is open to revision.[6]

O. 40, R. 4.

Enforcement of receiver's duties.

R. 4. [New.] Where a receiver—

(a) fails to submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs, or

(b) fails to pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, or

(c) occasions loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence, the Court may direct his property to be attached and may sell such property, and may apply the proceeds to make good any amount found to be due from him or any loss occasioned by him, and shall pay the balance (if any) to the receiver.

[Cf. R. S. C., O. 50, R. 18.]

Local Amendment.

MADRAS.

Substitute the following for R. 4:—

(1) If a receiver fails to submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs, the Court may order his property to be attached until he duly submits his accounts in the form ordered.

(2) The Court may, at the instance of any party to any suit or proceeding in which a receiver has been appointed or of its own motion, at any time make an enquiry as to what amount, if any, is due from the receiver as shown by his accounts or otherwise, or whether any loss to the property has been occasioned by his wilful default or gross negligence, and may order the amount found due or amount of the loss so occasioned to be paid by the receiver into Court or otherwise within a period to be fixed by the Court. All parties to the suit or proceeding and the receiver shall be made parties to any such enquiry. Notice of the enquiry shall be given by registered post to the surety, if any, for the receiver, but the cost of his appearance shall be borne by the surety himself unless the Court otherwise directs:

Provided that the Court may, where the account is disputed by the parties and is of a complicated nature or where it is alleged that loss has been occasioned to the property by the wilful default or gross negligence of the receiver, refer the parties to a suit. In all such cases the Court shall state in writing its reasons for the reference.

(3) If the receiver fails to pay any amount which he has been ordered to pay under sub-R. (2) of this rule, within the period fixed in the order, the Court may direct such amount to be recovered either from the security (if any) furnished by him under R. 3, or by attachment and sale of his property, or, if his property has been attached under sub-R. (1) of this rule, by sale of the property so attached, and may apply the proceeds of the sale to make good any amount found due from him or any loss occasioned by him and shall pay the balance (if any) of the sale proceeds to the receiver.

1—2.

"Property" in Cl. (c) includes income. See Note 2, Pt. (1).
Property of receiver in the hands of his legal representative. See Note 3, Pt. (1).

1. Scope and applicability of the rule.—The rule provides for coercive steps against the receiver who fails to carry out his duties as laid down in R. 3. When the receiver is guilty of a wilful default or gross negligence the only provision for taking action against him apart from proceeding against the security, is that his property can be attached; arrest and imprisonment are not to be the methods of enforcement.[1]

2. Loss to property by wilful default or gross neglect.—"Property" includes not only corpus of the property entrusted to the receiver but also the income derived from it.[1] The rule is a residuary provision and covers a case of misappropriation also.[2] Even a partner who is appointed receiver of partnership assets will be guilty of gross misconduct if he appropriates to his own use any of the partnership assets.[3]

A separate suit is the proper procedure for proceeding against a receiver on the basis of a wilful default and neglect.[4] Such a suit may be filed even after his discharge if it transpires that he has in his hands moneys belonging to the estate.[5] Similarly his accounts may be re-opened on discovery of errors, even where he has been discharged after the passing of his accounts. The proper procedure, however, in such a case is to hold an enquiry to find out whether any loss has been occasioned by his wilful default or gross negligence and to pass an order under this rule or, if desired to proceed against him under S. 145 of the Code. A separate suit against him is not necessary in such circumstances.[6]

If money paid by a receiver does not reach the proper destination, he must make good the loss, unless he can show that he acted with perfect regularity and has used such a degree of prudence as would be expected from an ordinary individual in his own affairs.[7]

Where at the time of appointing a receiver, there was a decree in favour of the estate about 11 years old and after his appointment the receiver applied for the arrest of the debtor but not for attachment of his properties on the ground that it was very much encumbered, it cannot be said that the receiver is guilty of any negligence at all. It must be shown by the party wishing to establish gross negligence on the part of the receiver, that it would have been profitable to the estate if the debtor's property had been attached.[7-a]

3. Court may direct his property to be attached.—Where a receiver dies, his property in the hands of his legal representatives may be attached.[1] But before directing the attachment of property under this rule, the Court must first determine the exact amount for which he is liable after due enquiry under R. 3, and give him an opportunity to pay the same.[2]

4. Removal of a receiver.—See Note 48 to R. 1, supra.

The Court has an inherent power in the exercise of its discretion, to remove a receiver appointed by it.[1] A receiver who has not complied with the Court's orders to keep proper accounts should be removed from office.[2] A receiver can be removed only by the Court appointing him.[3]

5. Appeal.—See also Note 51 to R. 1, ante.

An order under this rule is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (s).[1]

No appeal lies from the following orders:—

(1) An order which merely declares that the receiver is liable to the estate for a certain sum of money and which is not accompanied by any order for the attachment of his property.[1-a]

(2) An order fixing the period for which an account is to be filed.[2]

(3) An order removing a receiver from office.[3]

(4) An order for refund of losses to the estate due to the receiver's neglect.[4]

(5) An order directing the receiver to pay a certain sum of money into Court without any order for the attachment of his property.[5]

O. 40, R. 4, Note 5.

(6) An order directing the receiver to pay a certain sum of money by way of damages.[6]

But, in an appeal from an order for attachment under R. 4, the propriety of an order under R. 3 requiring the receiver to pay a certain sum of money to the estate can be attacked.[7]

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an order passing a receiver's account is appealable inasmuch as it is really an order refusing relief against the receiver under this rule.[8]

Local Amendments.

LAHORE.

Add the following proviso to sub-R. (1):—

"Provided that when two or more cases are tried together and decided by the same judgment, and two or more appeals are filed against the decrees, whether by the same or different appellants, the officer appointed in this behalf may, if satisfied that the questions for decisions are analogous in each appeal, dispense with the production of more than one copy of the judgment."

MADRAS.

Add the following sentence to sub-R. (1) of R. 1:—

"The copy of the judgment shall be a printed copy in every case in which the High Court has prescribed that the judgment shall be printed when a copy is applied for for the purpose of appeal."

Add the following as a proviso to sub-R. (1) of R. 1:—

"Provided that, in appeals from decrees or orders under any special or local Act to which the provisions of Parts II and III of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908, do not apply and in which certified copies of such decrees or orders have not been granted within the time prescribed for preferring an appeal, the appellate Court may admit the memorandum of appeal subject to the production of the copy of the decree or order appealed from within such time as may be fixed by the Court."

Add the following sentence to sub-R. (2) of R. 1:—

"The memorandum shall also contain a statement of the valuation of the appeal for the purposes of the Court Fees Act."

Add the following as a new sub-R. (3) to R. 1:—

"(3) When an appeal is presented after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, it shall be accompanied by a petition supported by affidavit setting forth the facts on which the appellant relies to satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within such period, and the Court shall not proceed to deal with the appeal in any way (otherwise than by dismissing it either under R. 11 of this Order or on the ground that it is not satisfied as to the sufficiency of the reasons for extending the period of limitation) until notice has been given to the respondent and his objections, if any, to the Court acting under the provisions of S. 5 of Act, IX of 1908, have been heard."

RANGOON.

The following shall be substituted for sub-R. (2) of R. 1:—

"(2) The memorandum shall set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed from, without any argument or narrative; and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively. When Burmese dates are given the corresponding English dates shall be added. The memorandum shall also contain—

(i) the full names and addresses of all parties;

(ii) particulars (class, number, year and Court) of the original proceedings; and

(iii) the value of the appeal (a) for Court-fees, and (b) for jurisdiction.

Material corrections or alterations shall be authenticated by the initials of the person signing the memorandum."

To R. 1, the following shall be added as sub-R. (3):—

"(3) The appellant shall present, along with the petition of appeal, as many copies on plain paper of the grounds of appeal as there are respondents."

Form of Memorandum of Appeal. See App. G, Form No. 1.

1. Memorandum of appeal to be signed by appellant or his pleader.—It is necessary that the memorandum of appeal should be signed by the appellant or his pleader. By virtue of the provisions of O. 3, R. 1, supra, an agent of the appellant, duly authorised may also sign the memorandum of appeal.[1] A defect in the authority will not necessarily invalidate the memorandum of appeal.[2] Where an appeal was filed on behalf of a company by one of its officers not duly authorised to do so, it was held that the defect could be cured by putting in a power of attorney duly authorising him to do so.[3] Similarly, where a memorandum of appeal was signed by a pleader whose vakalat was not signed by the party, it was held that the defect could be subsequently rectified by the party signing it.[4] It is immaterial, if the appellant has signed the appeal, that he has not written the memorandum of appeal himself.[5] Where an appeal consisted of two documents one containing the names of the parties and the other containing the grounds of appeal, the fact that the latter was not signed by the party is not fatal to the appeal.[6]

2. Presentation of memorandum of appeal.—O. 3, R. 1 provides that an appearance, application or act in or to any Court required or authorised by law to be made by a party may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognised agent or by his pleader. The presentation of a memorandum of appeal by a pleader holding a power of attorney from the party expressly authorising him to present it is valid, though the power is not filed with the appeal.[1] A memorandum of appeal may be presented where the appellant is a minor, by the appellant's guardian ad litem.[2] But a presentation by an unauthorised agent is no presentation in the eye of the law.[3] As to a presentation by the clerk of the pleader, see Note 9 to O. 3, R. 4, ante.

The memorandum of appeal should be presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf. A presentation to the Judge at his private residence after Court hours on the last day of limitation, is sufficient compliance with the law.[4] A presentation during the vacation or even on a Sunday is valid, provided it is to the proper officer.[4-a] It was held in the undermentioned case[5] that a memorandum of appeal must be taken to have been validly presented where it was deposited in the box put up by the appellate Court for the purpose. But a presentation to an officer of the Court other than the one appointed by the Court in this behalf[6] or the placing of the memorandum on the table of the appointed officer when he was absent[7] or the sending of a memorandum by post[8] is not a valid presentation.

A debtor in Civil Jail is entitled to present an appeal without the assistance of a pleader.[9]

An omission to join the necessary parties to an appeal makes the appeal invalid.[10]

See also Notes to O. 4, R. 1 as to the presentation of plaints.

3. Presentation with defective vakalatnama.—The presentation of a memorandum of appeal by a vakil without any authority from the party is not valid.[1] But the mere fact that the party has omitted by oversight to sign the vakalatnama[2] or the fact that the vakalatnama was not filed with the memorandum of appeal[3] does not invalidate the appeal. Where an appellant executes a vakalatnama in favour of two persons, but one of them alone accepts it, the presentation of the appeal by the latter is a valid presentation.[3-a]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the presentation of a memorandum of appeal is valid where the name of the vakil presenting it, is omitted in the vakalatnama. The High Court of Allahabad has held that it is not a valid presentation, the reason given being that the word "shall" in O. 3, R. 4 shows that the rule is of an imperative character.[4] The High Courts of Calcutta,[5] Lahore,[5-a] Patna[6] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[7] on the other hand, have held that the presentation is not invalid, and that the defect is one that can be cured. See also O. 3, R. 4, Notes 14 to 16.

4. Memorandum must be accompanied by copies of judgment and decree.—It is absolutely essential that a memorandum of appeal should be accompanied with a copy of the decree appealed from.[1] A memorandum of appeal not accompanied by such a copy is not a valid appeal[2] and this is so even if the decree has not yet been prepared[3] or the appellant is under an erroneous impression that it has not yet been prepared.[4] It has been held that the Court may in such cases give time for getting a copy of decree prepared and filing the same.[4-a] But see the criticism of this view in S. 2 (2)

O. 41, R. 1, Note 4.

Note 8. The Court may, however, where the copy of the decree is filed after the expiry of the period of limitation, excuse the delay under S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[4-b] The fact that a copy of the decree has already been filed in another proceeding is not sufficient.[5] In an appeal in a land acquisition case a copy of the award which is the decree in the case should be filed along with the memorandum of appeal.[6] Similarly in a probate case, a copy of the decree should accompany the memorandum of appeal.[7]

A memorandum of appeal should also be accompanied by a copy of the judgment appealed from. Only the final judgment need however be filed. It is not necessary to file interim orders and judgments disposing of preliminary issues in the case.[8] This rule makes a distinction between the filing of a copy of the decree and the filing of a copy of the judgment. The Court has no power to dispense with a copy of the decree[9] but it can dispense with a copy of the judgment. But unless dispensed with, a memorandum of appeal unaccompanied by a copy of the judgment is not valid.[10] Where, however, an appeal is admitted without a copy of the judgment, the order admitting the appeal may be taken to amount to an order dispensing with such copy.[11] The power to dispense with the copy of the judgment should, ordinarily, be exercised at the first hearing.[12] The fact that a copy of the judgment has been filed in another proceeding is not a sufficient ground for dispensing with the copy.[13] By force of O. 43, R. 2 a memorandum of appeal from an Order should be accompanied by a copy of the Order appealed from.[13-a] In cases,

An appeal from a decree which has been amended must be accompanied by a copy of the amended decree and not a copy of the original decree.[14] Where the decree is amended after the filing of the appeal the appellate Court may permit a copy of the amended decree to be attached to the memorandum of appeal, and the appeal becomes, from that moment, an appeal against the amended decree.[15] Where the amendment of the decree is only for the purpose of making the meaning of the decree clear, there is no such alteration as to make it a new decree and no copy of the amended decree need be filed in order to make the appeal, already filed, competent.[16]

The word "copy" in the rule means a certified copy.[17] A copy of the translation of the decree is not enough.[18] Nor does the rule require a printed copy of the judgment to be filed.[19] It is also not necessary that the copy should be one obtained by the appellant himself.[20] See also the case cited below.[21]

As to whether in second appeal a copy of the trial Court's judgment should be filed, see O. 42, R. 1, and the cases cited in Note 2 thereof. A copy of the trial Court's decree need not, under this rule, be filed along with a memorandum of second appeal.[21-a] The rule does not apply to appeals under the Madras Rent Recovery Act[22] or under the Oudh Rent Act.[23]

5. Date of presentation for purpose of limitation.—An appeal will be deemed to be validly presented for the purposes of limitation only when it is accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and of the judgment on which it is founded. Hence, though the memorandum of appeal may be filed within the period of limitation, it will be barred if the copies of the decree and judgment are not filed, till after the expiry of the period of limitation.[1] Where an appeal is filed against a minor respondent, the mere fact that the name of a guardian ad litem was not brought on record till after the period of limitation, will not make the appeal itself barred by limitation.[2]

As to when an application for revision may be converted into an appeal, see S. 115, Note 18.

6. Omission to file copy of decree in rival appeal.—Where there are several appeals from one judgment by different appellants, a copy of the judgment and of the decree should be filed in each appeal.[1] Thus in an appeal from an award under the Land Acquisition Act, the fact that the award disposed of many references, and it was filed in an appeal filed by a party in one appeal does not enable its being dispensed with in the other appeals.[2] But where the same appellant files different appeals from the same judgment, it has been held that it is sufficient if he files a copy of the judgment in one of the appeals only.[3]

7. Two decrees in two cross-appeals.—Where two cross-appeals are heard together and disposed of by a single judgment but two separate decrees are drawn up one in each appeal, there is a conflict of opinion as to whether an appeal against the judgment, filing a copy of one of the decrees only is valid.[1] The conflict is due to another aspect of the question namely whether an appeal against one of such decrees only is barred by res judicata by the non-filing of an appeal from the other. This aspect is discussed in Note 29, to S. 11, ante.

8. Limitation for appeal.—See Arts. 152 and 156 of the Limitation Act.

The said Act provides for the extension of the period of limitation prescribed in certain cases, and for exclusion of certain periods in computing the period of limitation prescribed.

Extension of the period.—S. 4 of the Act provides that where the period prescribed expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted preferred or made on the day that the Court reopens.[1] Under S. 5 of the Act the Court has a discretion to admit the appeal after the expiry of the limitation period, if it is satisfied that there was "sufficient cause" for not preferring the appeal within the time.[2] In exercising the discretion under the section, the Court must, on the one hand, be fully satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which the delay is sought to be excused.[3] On the other hand, the expression "sufficient cause" should be liberally construed so as to advance substantial justice when no negligence, nor inaction nor want of bona fides is imputable to the appellant.[4] So construed, it will include not only those circumstances which the law expressly recognises as extending the time, but also such circumstances as are not expressly recognised but which may appear to the Court to be reasonable looking to the facts of the case.[5] As to what constitutes "sufficient cause" within the meaning of that section, see the undermentioned cases.[6]

O. 41, R. 1, Note 8.

A Judge sitting in the Admission Court has power to excuse the delay in filing the appeal under S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[7] But an ex parte order admitting an appeal after the period of limitation can be set aside by the Court on objection by the opposite side after notice.[8] Such an objection should, however, be taken at the earliest possible opportunity after becoming aware of the order.[8-a] If an appeal is transferred from a District Judge, who has admitted the appeal ex parte, to a subordinate Judge for hearing, the latter can decide the question of limitation.[9]

An order admitting an appeal beyond limitation can be attacked in second appeal preferred against the appellate decree.[10] But the lower Court's discretion in allowing or refusing to allow an appeal to be filed beyond limitation under S. 5 of the Limitation Act, will not be lightly interfered with.[11] S. 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to appeals in forma pauperis.[12]

Exclusion of period under S. 12 of the Limitation Act.—In computing the period of limitation for an appeal, the appellant is entitled under S. 12 of the Limitation Act, to a deduction of the time required for obtaining copies of the decree and of the judgment appealed from.[13] It is not necessary for the extension of time under S. 12, that the copy must have been applied for by the appellant himself or his authorised agent.[14]

The following points should be noted in computing the "Time requisite" for obtaining the copies:—

(1) The period between the date of the application and the date on which the stamp papers and the necessary amounts are called for should be excluded.[15]

(2) The period between the date on which the stamp papers are supplied and the date on which the copy is ready for delivery should be excluded.[16] In calculating such period the day on which the stamp papers are supplied and the day on which the copy is ready should both be excluded.[17]

(3) The interval between the date on which the copy is ready and the actual date on which the party takes delivery thereof cannot be excluded.[18]

(4) Where separate applications are made for copies of the judgment and of the decree, the periods necessary for obtaining each of the copies can be excluded except to the extent to which such periods overlap each other.[19]

(5) Holidays intervening in such a way as to prevent a party from taking the necessary steps for obtaining copies should be regarded as part of the time requisite for obtaining copy.[20] But to claim the benefit of S. 12 the application for copy must be made before the expiry of the period of limitation for the appeal.[21] If the period of limitation for the appeal expires on a day on which the Court is closed, the appellant applies for copy on the reopening day, he is not entitled to any extension of time on account of the intervention of the holidays.[22]

O. 41, R. 1; Notes 8—10.

(6) An appellant is entitled to deduct as time requisite for obtaining copy of decree, any period during which the decree remains unsigned.[23] But he is not entitled to do so if the delay in signing the decree was before his application for copy.[24]

Exclusion of period under S. 14 of the Limitation Act.—S. 14 of the Limitation Act does not apply to appeals. But where time has been spent in prosecuting an appeal in a wrong Court through a bona fide mistake the delay in filing the appeal may be excused in the exercise of the discretion of the Court under S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[25] But where the appellant has been guilty of carelessness he is not entitled to extension of time on the ground of having prosecuted his remedy in a wrong Court.[26] In the case cited below[27] it was held that the time during which an appellant was prosecuting an application under O. 9, R. 13 cannot be deducted in calculating the period of limitation against him.

9. Exclusion of time in seeking review of judgment.—An appellant is not entitled, as of right, to the exclusion of the time spent by him in seeking a review of the judgment, in computing the period of limitation for his appeal.[1] But if the appellant can show that he had reasonable grounds for applying for review instead of preferring an appeal and that he had exercised due diligence, the time taken up by the review application may be excused under S. 5 of the Limitation Act in computing the limitation for the appeal.[2]

10. Misdescription in the memorandum of appeal.—The mere misdescription of an appeal as where, it is described as being an appeal from an order instead of its being described as one from a decree will not invalidate the appeal.[1]

11. Grounds of objection.—The general principle is in favour of the correctness of the lower Court's judgment and the onus is on the appellant to show that it is wrong.[1] Accordingly this rule provides that the memorandum of appeal should state the grounds of objection on which the decree is attacked.[2] Such grounds should not be vague[3] but must raise specific issues.[4] R. 2 of this order provides that where an objection has not been raised in the memorandum of appeal, the appellant is not entitled, without the leave of the Court, to raise it at the hearing.

It is open to the appellant to set up any circumstance showing that the Judge of the lower Court was disqualified to try the case.[5]

12. Grounds that may be taken in the memorandum of appeal for the first time.—The general rule is that the appellant cannot be allowed to raise in his memorandum of appeal, a new case,[1] or a plea abandoned by him in the trial Court,[2] or a case inconsistent with that alleged by him in the lower

O. 41, R.1, Note 12.

there are certain objections such as those relating to the place of suing, or the valuation of the suit, that cannot, under the specific provisions of the statute, be raised for the first time in appeal (see S. 21 of the Code and S. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887). Such objections therefore cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in the memorandum of appeal.[6] An objection that a declaratory decree cannot be passed with respect to a future right will not also be allowed to be raised for the first time in the memorandum of appeal.[7]

The following are, however, recognised as exceptions to the general rule that a new case cannot be raised for the first time in the memorandum of appeal:—

(1) Objections as to jurisdiction apparent on the face of the record.[8]

(2) Pleas going to the root of the case, and which are obvious on the face of the record,[9] such as non-joinder of essential parties[10] or want of notice to quit,[11] or insufficiency of notice in suits for foreclosure.[12]

judicata[15] which can be substantiated on the facts already on the record.

13. When appellate Court may not interfere with findings of fact.— In Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. v. Moti Lal,[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

> "On appeal, the whole case, including the facts, are within the jurisdiction of the Appeal Court. But generally speaking, it is undesirable to interfere with the findings of the trial Judge who sees and hears the witnesses and has an opportunity of noting their demeanour, especially in cases where the issue is simple and depends on the credit which attached to one or other of conflicting witnesses. Nor should his pronouncement with respect to their credibility be put aside on a mere calculation of probabilities by the Court of appeal."

In Prasanna Moyee v. Baikunthnath,[2] the Calcutta High Court observed as follows:—

> "Two conflicting view-points have to be reconciled, namely, on the one hand, the undoubted duty of the Court of Appeal to review the recorded evidence and to draw its own inferences and conclusions, and, on the other hand, the unquestionable weight which must be attached to the opinion of the Judge of the primary Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noticing their look and manner."

14. Competency of appeal.—Where leave to appeal has to be obtained before preferring an appeal, the memorandum of appeal should be accompanied by a petition for such leave.[1] An objection as to the maintainability of the appeal should be considered by the Court, though it was not raised in the first instance by the respondent's pleader.[2] See also the following cases.[3] Where a party has accepted the order of the lower Court as correct and has enjoyed the benefit thereof, he will be estopped from appealing against the same.[4] (See also Notes under S. 96.)

15. Consolidation of appeals.—A Court has inherent power to consolidate suits or appeals in proper cases.[1] But this cannot be done so as to affect the provisions of the Court Fees Act or of this Code. Thus several appeals in cases disposed of by one judgment cannot be consolidated so as to enable the appellant to pay Court-fee on the value of the consolidated appeals and file only one vakalat.[2] Where one decree only was passed in two appeals preferred by two sets of defendants against the decree of the trial Court, it was held that one second appeal was enough.[3]

16. Stamp on memorandum of appeal.—It has been seen in Note 2 to S. 149, ante, that the institution of a suit or other proceeding will not be a legal institution if the fee chargeable under law is not paid at the time of the institution, but that Court, may under the provisions of S. 149, allow the payment of the stamp fee at any stage and thus validate the institution. A memorandum of appeal which does not bear the proper stamp fee, prescribed therefor is not validly presented,[1] unless the Court allows under S. 149 the fee to be paid subsequently.[1-a]

Under S. 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, the decision of the Taxing Officer as to the Court-fee required is final. Where, however, no such decision has been given by the Taxing Officer, the respondent can raise the question at the time of the hearing of the appeal.[2]

In order to see which part of the decree is the subject of appeal before it, the appellate Court must look at the memorandum of appeal and not the stamp fee affixed thereon.[3] Nor, where an appeal memorandum is insufficiently stamped, can the Court grant a relief proportionate to the stamp affixed.[4] As to the amount of fee leviable in appeals, see the Court Fees Act, 1870, and the undermentioned cases.[5]

17. Refund where memorandum is overstamped.—The Court has inherent jurisdiction in a fit case to order the refund of excess Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal.[1] But the Court can only grant a certificate to the appellant authorising him to receive back such excess. The appellant should thereafter apply to the Collector for refund of the Court-fee.[2] See also S. 13 of the Court Fees Act.

18. Applicability of the Order to other proceedings.—It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras[1] that the provisions of this Order apply also to Original Side appeals. In the undermentioned cases[2] it was held that appeals under S. 476-B of the Code of Criminal Procedure should also be treated as civil appeals regulated by the provisions of this Order.

The provisions of this Order apply to proceedings under the N.-W. F. P. Law and Justice Regulation (VII of 1901), S. 89 and the Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), S. 29. See also the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sch. 2.

Note 4.

4. Leave of Court to raise new point.—The Court has under this rule, a discretion to permit a new point, not raised in the memorandum of appeal, to be raised and argued at the hearing.[1] The leave may, however, be express or implied.[1-a] But, unless such permission is taken, the Court will not allow such a point to be argued at the hearing.[1-b] The mere fact that the respondent has had notice of the fact that the appellant intends to raise such point at the hearing cannot dispense with the Court's permission under this rule.[2]

The Court will refuse to permit a new point to be argued where, at the time of taking it, the period of limitation for the appeal had expired and where the allowing of such a point to be argued would practically amount the appellant to set up a new appeal.[3] But where the point sought to be raised is involved in the points already raised in the memorandum of appeal[4] or is a question of law depending on no new facts except those already on the record[5] or is a point to which the other side cannot legitimately raise an objection on the ground of surprise,[6] the Court may grant the appellant leave to raise it. The Court should, however, grant the permission only on such terms as would indemnify the opposite party for the loss caused to him by reason of the failure of the applicant to raise the point in time.[7]

5. Point of limitation.—Under S. 3 of the Limitation Act a Court is bound to reject a suit or appeal if it is barred by limitation even though the bar of limitation may not have been raised in the pleadings.[1] But this section does not apply where the plea is not that the appeal before that Court is barred by limitation but that the suit or appeal in the lower Court was barred by limitation.[2] Hence, unless a plea that the suit or appeal in the lower Court was barred by limitation is taken in the memorandum of appeal preferred to the higher Court under R. 2, it cannot be urged at the hearing of the appeal without the leave of the appellate Court.[3] As a general rule, the appellate Court will permit a point of limitation though not raised in the memorandum of appeal, to be raised at the hearing of the appeal, where it is apparent on the face of the proceedings and does not involve any new question of fact.[4] But it will not do so where such a plea involves an investigation of further facts.[5]

6. Point of jurisdiction.—A point of jurisdiction not involving an investigation into other facts than those on the record will be allowed to be raised at the hearing of an appeal, though it was not raised in the memorandum of appeal. Thus a plea as to the jurisdiction of the Court to make a reference to arbitration[1] or a plea as to the competency of the Court to grant the relief claimed[2] or a plea of res judicata[3] or a plea that the plaint does not disclose a cause of action against the defendant[4] can be permitted to be argued at the hearing of the appeal.

7. "Appellate Court shall not be confined .... of the Court."—An appellant is confined to the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal or taken at the hearing with the permission of the Court. He cannot advance at the hearing a point not so raised or taken. But the appellate Court is not confined in deciding the appeal to the points so raised or taken. It is entitled to base its decision on grounds neither set forth in the memorandum of appeal nor taken with the leave of the Court.[1] Thus it can suo motu raise a point of limitation[2] or of jurisdiction[3] apparent on the face of the record and decide the appeal on that point. Where alternative grounds of appeal are raised, it can go into questions which are admitted for the purpose of an alternative argument and give a finding against the appellant.[4] But a party cannot claim, as of right, that the Court must exercise power given under this rule.[5]

The power given to the appellate Court under this rule does not extend to the making out a new case for either party and to grant them relief on that basis[6] or to go behind a finding of fact which is accepted by the appellant[7] or to interfere with a part of the decree which is not appealed from.[8] Thus in an appeal by the defendants where there is no cross-objection by the plaintiff the appellate Court cannot, while dismissing the appeal, enlarge the relief granted to the plaintiff by the lower Court.[9] The Court will not also be justified in taking up a new question under this rule unless there can be no reasonable doubt on the record that the evidence on the new point had been completely given on both sides or the point is a pure question of law and it is expedient in the interests of justice to consider and decide it.[10] An appellant can give Appellate Court has same powers as trial Court. See Note 1, Pt. (2) and S. 107.

1. ''May be rejected''.—The power to reject a memorandum of appeal under this rule, is limited to cases where it is defective in point of form or in respect of the grounds which it must contain. It cannot be interpreted as enabling the Court to reject a memorandum of appeal on the ground that it is insufficiently stamped[1] or on the ground that it is barred by limitation.[1-a] But independently of the provisions of this rule, the Court can, under O. 7, R. 11 read with S. 107, reject an appeal if it is not sufficiently stamped provided that an opportunity is given to the appellant to make good the deficiency and he fails to do so within the time fixed.[2] See S. (2), Cl. (2), Note 13; O. 7, R. 11, Notes 6 and 11 and O. 7, R. 13, ante.

The rule does not impose any duty on the appellate Court to examine every memorandum of appeal immediately on presentation, and add proper parties if the appellant neglects to do so.[3]

The Court can exercise its power of rejecting a memorandum of appeal under this rule at any stage[4] though, as a general rule, the proper time to do so would be the time of its presentation and not after it has been admitted.[5]

2. ''Or be returned to the appellant for the purpose of being amended''.—Where the memorandum of appeal consisted of two documents, one, in the vernacular, containing the names of parties, and signed by the appellant, and the other in English containing the grounds of appeal but not signed by the appellant, it was held that the defect, if any, could be remedied by an amendment under this rule.[1] A memorandum of appeal which merely states that the proceedings of the lower Court are irregular and contrary to law is too vague and general and requires amendment before the appeal can be heard.[2] In this rule there is no limitation as to the time or stage when the memorandum of appeal may be returned for amendment.[3] But whenever a memorandum of appeal is returned for amendment the Court should fix a time for its representation.[4]

A memorandum of appeal from the preliminary decree can be amended so as to constitute an appeal from the final decree also.[5]

3. Defect of parties.—Where the respondent is wrongly named owing to a clerical error in the decree, the mistake is not a fatal one but can be rectified.[1] A single appeal by different persons having different defences and reasons for appealing is irregular.[2] As to whether an appeal filed against a dead person can be rectified by adding the legal representatives, see S. 153, Note 5 and O. 1, R. 10 and also the case cited below.[3]

4. Scandalous matters.—Where a memorandum of appeal contains irrelevant and scandalous allegations which are separable from the rest, a Court of appeal should not reject it, but should either expunge the objectionable part or return the memorandum of appeal for amendment, and refuse to receive it back until such part is struck out.[1] The Court will return a memorandum of appeal making allegations of partiality against the Judge from whose decree the appeal is sought to be filed, and order the objectionable matter to be expunged therefrom.[2] See also Notes 2 and 6 to O. 6, R. 16, ante.

5. Reasons for rejection.—A Court rejecting a memorandum of appeal under this rule should record its reasons for such rejection.[1]

6. Appeal.—An appeal will lie from an order rejecting a memorandum of appeal if it amounts to a decree. As to the question whether it amounts to a decree, see Note 13 to S. 2, sub-S. (2), ante, and the case cited below.[1]

A rejection of a memorandum of appeal on the ground of limitation amounts really to a dismissal of the appeal under R. 11, infra, and is, therefore, appealable.[2]

7. Second appeal.—An order returning a memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court is appealable as an order, and hence under

1. Scope and object of the rule.—The general rule is that, on an appeal by one of several plaintiffs or defendants, the appellate Court can reverse or vary the decree of the trial Court only in favour of the party appealing. This rule and R. 33 provide exceptions to the general rule,[1] and give the Court ample power to make the appropriate order needed in the interests of justice.[1-a] While R. 33 of this order provides that the appellate Court has power to make the proper decree even in cases where the appeal is as to a part only of the decree,[2] this rule provides that where a decree proceeds upon a ground common to all the plaintiffs or defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the appellate Court can reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or the defendants, as the case may be.[3] In such a case the appeal by one is virtually treated as an appeal on behalf of all, though they may not be parties to the appeal.[4] The rule therefore will not apply where the appeal is directed only against that portion of the decree which affects the appellant.[4-a] or where the appealing plaintiff or defendant cannot, under the circumstances of the particular case, be considered as appealing on behalf of the non-appealing plaintiffs or defendants, e.g., where one of the defendants appeals on his own behalf and impleads the non-appealing defendants as respondents.[4-b] A decree passed by the appellate Court does not, as a matter of course, enure to persons who have not joined in the appeal merely because the lower Court's decree has proceeded on a common ground. The rule will apply only where the Court consciously decides to apply it.[4-c] The policy of the rule is, firstly, to give the appellate Court full power to do justice to all parties, whether before it or not, provided the whole case is gone into at the instance of the parties representing all the necessary contentions in the case,[5] and, secondly, to prevent contradictory decisions in the matter in the same suit.[6]

The rule does not become inapplicable merely because the non-appealing defendant has, in the meanwhile, obeyed the lower Court's decree[7] or because he has separately appealed from the same decree and has failed in his appeal.[8] But the rule has no application where there are several suits, the decree in each of which, proceeds on a ground common to the defendants in all the suits,[9] unless such suits are consolidated.[10] Nor will the rule apply where the plaintiff who appeals has no locus standi to appeal.[11] Where, for a suit under S. 92 of the Code, the consent of the Advocate-General has been given to three persons, they all constitute in the eye of the law, one plaintiff and therefore one of them alone cannot appeal so as to make this rule applicable.[12]

Where a decree is passed against two defendants on a ground common to both and one of them appeals against the decree while the other files cross-objections to the decree the appellate Court can transpose the latter defendant as an appellant and decide the appeal in his favour.[13]

Where there are several respondents before the lower appellate Court any one of them may maintain the second appeal on behalf of all under this rule but he cannot represent a person who was not a respondent in the lower appellate Court.[14] Nor can a person not a party to the first appeal prefer a second appeal under this rule.[14-a]

The rule applies also to a cross-appeal by respondents.[15]

2. "Decree".—A decree may be reversed under this rule in favour of all the defendants even if some of them allowed the decree to be passed ex parte against them, provided the other conditions laid down in the rule are satisfied.[1] But where a decree is passed against some of the defendants on confession of judgment, the decree cannot be reversed in their favour under this rule.[2]

3. "Common ground."--It is essential for the application of this rule that the decree appealed from should have proceeded on a ground common to all the plaintiffs or defendants. Otherwise the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to reverse or vary the entire decree except on the appeal of all the plaintiffs or defendants.[1] Further, the rule does not apply unless the lower Court's decree proceeds on a common ground and not where the appellate Court wishes to proceed on a common ground and reverse or vary the lower Court's decree in favour of all the parties.[1] It is not necessary that all the grounds upon which the lower Court proceeds should be common to all the parties. It is enough if it proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or defendants.[2] It is not also necessary that all the defendants should claim an interest in the property affected by the decree.[3] The rule will apply when the defendants put forward a common defence as against the plaintiff, although they dispute each other's rights.[4]

In applying this rule, the Court is entitled to consider the ground or finding upon which the judgment or decision is based, and not merely the operative portion of the decree.[5]

4. Ground common to all the plaintiffs.—Where there are several plaintiffs and the suit is dismissed on a ground common to all of them the appellate Court may reverse the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs although only some of them have appealed.[1] A and B the alleged reversioners of one F sue X for possession. The suit is dismissed as time-barred. A alone appeals and the appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the suit is not time-barred. The appellate Court can reverse the decree in favour of B also although he had not joined in the appeal, inasmuch as the lower Court's decree proceeded on a ground common to both A and B, namely that the suit was time-barred.[2]

Though an application for commutation of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act must be made by all the landlords, an appeal by some only of the landlords in such proceedings is maintainable.[3]

5. Ground common to all the defendants.—Under this rule, where a decree is passed against several defendants and the decree proceeds on any ground common to all the defendants, it is open to any of them to appeal from the whole decree and on such appeal the appellate Court can reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the defendants.[1] A mortgaged certain properties to X, and sold the same to B on 5—3—1925. On 10—3—1925, A paid X the whole of the interest due upto that date and it was arranged that the principal should be paid by 16—10—1925, failing which further interest would accrue from 10—3—1925 till payment. On 16—3—1925, B tendered to X a certain sum as the principal amount due on the mortgage. On X refusing to receive the same B deposited the amount in Court under S. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 on 22—10—1925. X thereafter filed a suit against A and B for the interest accrued due from 10—3—1925 to 22—10—1925 on the ground that no valid tender was made on 16—3—1925. A and B contested the suit on the ground that the tender was a valid one. The trial Court passed a decree against both A and B overruling their plea. B alone appealed against the decree. It was held that the ground on which the decree of the lower Court proceeded, viz., that there was no valid tender being common to both A and B the appellate Court could under this rule reverse the decree against A also though he had not joined in the appeal.[2]

O. 41, . 4, Note 6.

power under this rule is discretionary, and that the Court is not bound to exercise it.[1]

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this rule applies to cases where one of the plaintiffs or defendants appeals without impleading the other plaintiffs or defendants as parties to the appeal. The High Court of Calcutta has held that it does[2] while the Lahore High Court holds that it does not.[3] Opinion in the High Court of Allahabad is conflicting, some cases holding that it does[4] and some, that it does not.[5] It is submitted that the Calcutta view is correct.

The Court may, under this rule reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be. It does not enable a decree to be passed against a person. Such a decree may be passed under R. 33, infra if the person against whom the decree is varied or reversed has been impleaded as a party to the appeal.[6] The reason is that it is a fundamental rule of law that no order can be passed against a person without his being given an opportunity of showing cause against it. It has however been held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case[7] that where A and B obtain a decree against C for a part of the claim made in the suit, and in an appeal by B for the portion of the claim disallowed C filed cross objections against the portion decreed, and the appellate Court dismissed the claim in toto, A was bound by the decision, notwithstanding he was not a party to the appeal, inasmuch as B's appeal was on behalf of A also.

Where a suit is partly decreed and partly dismissed and in an appeal by the plaintiff against the part dismissed, no cross objections are filed against the part decreed, the appellate Court cannot interfere with such portion. This rule has no application to such a case.[8] Where a decree is passed against A and B, and B alone appeals from the decree, the appellate Court cannot while setting aside the decree against B pass a new decree against A.[9]

Where the appellate Court exonerates a particular defendant from the lower Court's decree and that defendant's interest is separable from that of the others, the appellate decree does not enure to the benefit of the latter.[10]

7. Failure to file cross objections.—See Notes to R. 22 and R. 33, infra.

8. Death of one of several appellants in a case where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all of them.—See O. 22, Rr. 2, 3, 4 and 11, ante. The provisions of O. 22 apply also to appeals. (Vide O. 22, R. 11.) Hence, on the death of one of several appellants, if the right of appeal survives to the surviving appellants alone, the appeal may be proceeded with by the latter.[1] Where the right of appeal does not survive to the surviving appellant alone, the appeal will abate so far as the deceased appellant is concerned, if his legal representatives are not brought on the record within the prescribed period of limitation.

If the case is of such a nature that it cannot be disposed of in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased the whole appeal will abate. But if the lower Court's decree proceeds on a ground common to the deceased as well as to the survivors, then, the latter can under this rule, appeal from the whole decree and the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased is no bar to the disposal of the appeal. Hence, in such a case, if the legal representatives are not substituted within the period of limitation the appeal abates only so far as the deceased is concerned and not as a whole,[2] and if the appeal succeeds the appellate decree or order enures to the benefit of all the appellants including the deceased.[3]

Where one of several respondents dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record within the period of limitation and the right of appeal does not survive against the surviving respondents alone, the appeal will abate against him. See O. 22, R. 4, but if the presence of the legal representatives of the deceased is essential for the determination of the appeal, the entire appeal will abate, and must fail by reason of defect of parties. This rule does not apply to such a case so as to prevent the abatement of the appeal as the rule applies only to appellants and not respondents to an appeal.[4]

The death of an unnecessary party does not affect the validity of a decree passed in the absence of his legal representatives.[5]

9. Application for execution by non-appealing parties and the limitation therefor.—When a decree is appealed from, limitation for an application for its execution runs from the date of the appellate decree [see Limitation Act, Art. 182, Cl. (2)]. Where there are several plaintiffs or defendants and the appellate Court reverses or modifies the lower Court's decree on the appeal of some of the plaintiffs or defendants under this rule, time for execution runs from the appellate decree even as regards the non-appealing parties.[1] But where this rule does not apply to the case, the appeal does not postpone the starting of limitation for an application for execution by the non-appealing parties.[2]

10. Court-fee.—Where one of several appellants takes a ground of appeal which goes to the root of the respondent's case so that if the ground succeeds, the entire decree will be reversed and not merely that portion of it which concerns the particular appellant, the appellant must pay the Court-fee sufficient to cover the whole relief obtainable on such a ground.[1] The entire decree can be reversed in an appeal by some of the defendants under this rule though one of them, appealing as to costs alone, engrosses his appeal only a stamp to cover the amount of costs.[2]

11. Review.—This rule does not apply to applications for review.[1]

12. Revision.—Where in a case coming under this rule the appellate Court refuses to reverse a decree in favour of non-appealing parties, while reversing it in favour of the appellants, on the ground that it has no power to do so, its decree can be set aside in revision as it amounts to a failure to exercise jurisdiction.[1]

The power of the High Court in revision under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act is not less wide than under this rule.[2]

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "an appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order" in sub-R. (1) are new, and have been added to make it clear that proceedings under a decree as well as execution of the decree can be stayed by the appellate Court. See Note 4.

2. Sub-R. (4) is new. It expressly authorises the Court to pass an ex parte Order of stay pending the hearing of the main application for stay.

2. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule provides for—

(1) A stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from and

(2) A stay of execution of such decree or order.

After an appeal has been filed the appellate Court may order the stay of proceedings under the decree or of execution of such decree.[1] Before an appeal is filed from an appealable decree, the Court which passed the decree may order the execution to be stayed but not of other proceedings under the decree. Nor, in such a case, has the appellate Court any jurisdiction to order the stay of execution of the decree.[2]

The object of the rule is to see that the ultimately successful party gets not merely a barren success but is able to reap the fruits of his success.[3] At the same time, the decree-holder's right to reap the fruits of his decree should not be lightly interfered with.[4] This rule combines these two principles and, while it provides for the execution of a decree being stayed pending on appeal, it restricts the circumstances under which such stay may be granted.

The rule applies to all decrees including decrees relating to moveable as well as immoveable property[5] and to decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights.[6] But it does not enable the High Court to stay proceedings in a Court not subordinate to it.[7]

This rule is not exhaustive of all the circumstances in which a stay of execution can be granted under the Code. Thus—

(1) Under O. 20, R. 11 the Court which passed the decree can postpone the payment of the amount decreed.[8]

(2) Under O. 21, R. 26 the Court to which a decree has been transferred for execution can stay execution under the circumstances mentioned therein.

(3) Under O. 21, R. 29, where a suit by the judgment-debtor against the decree-holder is pending, execution of the decree may be stayed.

(6) In cases not covered by any of the said provisions a sale can be stayed under the Court's inherent powers.[9] See also Note 2 to S. 151 under the heading "Stay of execution and other proceedings".

3. Rule does not apply where decree has been executed.—The rule does not apply where a decree has already been executed.[1] But, where a respondent prevented an order for stay of execution being passed by representing to the Court that there was no application for execution, and immediately afterwards applied for execution in the lower Court and obtained a delivery of possession, it was held that the respondent was guilty of overreaching the Court, and that the delivery of possession could not be allowed to stand.[2]

4. Stay of proceedings.—The mere filing of an appeal does not suspend the operation of a decree, and is no bar to proceedings being taken under the decree, except so far as the appellate Court orders otherwise.[1] Under the old Code there was no express provision for staying proceedings under the lower Court's decree, other than execution proceedings.[2] It was, however, held that the appellate Court could, under its inherent power, stay such proceedings.[3] The present rule now expressly authorises the appellate Court not only to stay the execution of the decree, but to stay proceedings under the decree as well.[4] Thus in an appeal from an order directing the issue of a probate of a will, the appellate Court can pass an order staying the issue of probate.[5] In an appeal against an order appointing a receiver, the appellate Court can pass an order directing the receiver not to act till further orders.[6] In an appeal from a preliminary decree in a partition suit[7] or in a mortgage suit[8] further proceedings can be stayed under this rule. Similarly, in an appeal from a preliminary decree in a suit for accounts, an order can be made staying enquiry into the accounts, pending the appeal,[9] though as a general rule, no such stay will be allowed, unless irreparable injury is likely to result to the appellant, by not passing such an order.[10]

The High Court can under this rule read with S. 47, sub-S. (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act suspend a sentence of imprisonment passed under that Act, pending the disposal of the appeal from such sentence.[11]

A proceeding for restitution on a decree being varied or reversed, is not "a proceeding under the decree" within the meaning of this rule and cannot be stayed.[12] But an application for possession is a proceeding under the order confirming a sale, and the appellate Court can, under this rule, order the same to be stayed pending appeal by the judgment-debtor against the order confirming the sale.[13]

The Court can make the payment of interest, a condition for staying execution of the decree.[14]

5. Stay of execution when may be granted.—As has been seen in Note 2 above, an appellate Court has no power before an appeal is filed before it, to order the stay of execution of the decree of the lower Court. It is the Court which passed the decree that can, in such a case, stay the execution of the decree.[1] An application for stay of execution of a decree passed on the Original Side of the High Court, in view of an intended appeal, must, ordinarily be made to the Judge who tried the case.[2] It is, however, essential for the applicability of the sub-R. (2) that the decree, the execution of which is sought to be stayed, should be an appealable one, and that the application for stay is made before the expiry of the period of limitation for the appeal.[3] Thus if a decree has become final and unappealable, the Court has no power to stay the execution thereof in view of a pending application for review.[3-a] The fact that a preliminary decree has been appealed against, does not empower the Court to order the stay of execution of the final decree in the suit from which no appeal is intended to be preferred.[3-b] A Court cannot under this rule order the stay of execution of the decree at the instance of a person not a party to the suit, who claims immoveable property liable to be taken under the decree.[3-c]

After an appeal has been filed from a decree, it is only the appellate Court that can, under this rule, stay the execution thereof; the lower Court has no power to do so,[4] though it can grant time to the judgment-debtor to enable him to obtain a stay order from the appellate Court.[5] The appellate Court may grant a stay even where an appeal has been filed in forma pauperis and the application for leave to appeal as a pauper is pending disposal.[5-a] But in order that the appellate Court may exercise its powers under this rule, it is necessary that there should be an appeal pending against the decree the execution of which is sought to be stayed. Thus, where an appeal is filed against an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree, the appellate Court has no power to stay the execution of the decree,[6] though the original Court can postpone the sale in execution of such decree, under the provisions of O. 21, R. 69.[7] Similarly, the appellate Court cannot, in an appeal against an order filing an award, stay the execution of the decree on the award.[8] It has been, however, held by the High Court of Bombay in the case cited below,[9] that, in an appeal from an order refusing to set aside an award, it has inherent power to stay the execution under the award.

Rule 6, sub-R. (2), infra, provides that the Court which passed the decree may stay the sale in an execution of the decree. This, however, does not affect the powers of the appellate Court under this rule to stay such sale.[10] Nor does the refusal of a stay under this rule bar an application under R. 6.[11] A stay may be granted though the decree may have specified a date within which the judgment-debtor should comply with it and such date has passed without the judgment-debtor doing so.[12]

It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that no order staying execution of the decree appealed from can be made when no execution application has been made or is pending before any Court.[13] It purports to rely upon the undermentioned case of the High Court of Bombay[14] which was a case of a stay of a sale under the section corresponding to R. 6 which requires an application for execution to be pending before the lower Court. The said decision of the Lahore High Court cannot be accepted as laying down the correct law.

6. "Sufficient cause".—A stay of execution under this rule either by the appellate Court or by the Court which passed the decree, can be ordered only on "sufficient cause" being shown for such stay.[1] A stay will not be granted where the appeal does not raise fairly arguable questions.[2] The mere fact that the period of limitation for appeal from the decree has not expired is not a "sufficient cause" for ordering the stay of execution of the decree.[3] The fact that the judgment-debtor has been constructively guilty of contempt of Court in not having complied with a decree which specified a certain time within which he should have done so, does not disentitle him to an order for stay.[4] See also the undermentioned cases[5] which bear upon the expression "sufficient cause".

7. "Substantial loss."—Execution should not be stayed unless the Court is satisfied that substantial loss may otherwise result to the judgment-debtor.[1] The loss must be a tangible one and not a mere annoyance to the feelings.[2]

In cases of decrees for the possession of immoveable property there is no general rule that there should be a stay of execution as a matter of course. It depends upon the circumstances of each case whether substantial loss will result to the appellant if the stay is refused. The Court should consider the nature of the property[2-a] and the character of the possession and the past enjoyment of the property.[2-b] Where the Court is satisfied that it would be difficult for the appellant to recover back the property if he succeeds in the appeal there is "sufficient" cause for granting a stay.[3] But the mere possibilities that the decree-holder may transfer the property to third parties is not a sufficient cause unless it is alleged that the decree-holder actually contemplates making such a transfer.[4] It has been held by the Lahore High Court that the disturbance of the appellant's possession is itself a "substantial loss" and that such possession should be protected till the plaintiff has finally established his title.[5]

The mere fact that the decree-holder is a woman possessed of no property is no ground for staying execution of the decree pending an appeal. The appellant's interest can be sufficiently safeguarded by ordering the respondent to furnish security for restitution of the property taken in execution.[6]

Ordinarily the execution of a mere decree for costs cannot be stayed.[7] It has been held by the Bombay High Court that where the respondent is willing to give security for restitution, execution of a decree for money should not ordinarily be stayed.[8]

See also the undermentioned cases.[9]

8. Application must have been made without unreasonable delay.— The application for stay should be made without any unreasonable delay.[1] In the case cited below,[2] where an application for stay was made nine months after the appeal had been filed but soon after an application for execution was made by the decree-holder to the lower Court, it was held by Suhrawardy, J., the applicant could not be said to be guilty of any delay. But Graham, J., who sat with him held that an application for stay of execution should be filed soon after the appeal is filed and that the appellant was guilty of unreasonable delay.

9. Affidavit in support of the application.—An application for stay of execution should be supported by affidavit showing the existence of "sufficient cause" for stay.[1] Where the allegations in the affidavit are not contradicted by any counter affidavit, stay may be granted.[2] A bare statement, however, in the affidavit, that the applicant will suffer substantial loss if execution was not stayed is not enough.[3] Before applying for stay, a pleader should verify that the statements made to him were made by the proper parties.[4]

10. Notice to decree-holder.—Although an interim stay order can be passed pending the disposal of the application for stay, without notice to the decree-holder[1] a final order staying execution should not be made without such notice.[2] In an earlier case of the High Court of Patna it was held that the failure to give such notice was merely an error of procedure and the order for stay is not open to revision on the ground of want of notice.[3] In a later case, however, the same High Court interfered in revision and set aside such an order.[4]

11. Security for performance of decree.—The appellant is not entitled to have an order for stay without furnishing security for the performance of the decree that may be ultimately binding upon him.[1] Thus security may be ordered to be given for the restitution of mesne profits which may be ultimately declared due to the respondent.[2] A stay order on condition of security being given comes into operation only on security being given.[3]

The Court should not accept any security without inquiring into its sufficiency.[4] The judgment-debtor must be allowed an opportunity to show that the security offered is sufficient.[5] A security, the enforcement of which is likely to lead to litigation should not be accepted.[6]

Stay of execution is often granted on condition that the appellant deposits the amount of the security in Court. In such cases, if the appeal is dismissed the money so deposited is held to the credit of the decree-holder. The depositor cannot withdraw it[7] even if the decree-holder has failed to apply for execution within the prescribed period of limitation.[8] A decree-holder attaching the amount in execution of his decree is not entitled to claim any portion thereof in preference to the decree-holder with reference to whose decree the deposit was made.[9] If the sum so deposited exceeds the sum ultimately awarded to the decree-holder it should be applied towards the payment of the costs.[10] Where, however, the judgment-debtor satisfied the decree otherwise, the sum deposited as security should be returned to him.[11] A security bond hypothecating immoveable property is chargeable with stamp duty under Art. 40 of the Stamp Act, 1899.[12] According to the High Courts of Madras[13] and Rangoon[14] and the Chief Court of Punjab,[15] such a bond for a sum exceeding Rs. 100 is compulsorily registrable. The High Court of Bombay has, on the other hand, held that it is not.[16]

After execution has been stayed on giving security, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to cancel the security bond[17] though, where it is no longer required, the Court may cancel it.[18]

O. 41, R.5, Notes 15—17.

15. Insolvency of appellant and deposit.—Where execution is stayed on the appellant depositing in Court the decretal amount, and the appellant is thereafter declared an insolvent the amount deposited in Court is payable, on the appeal being dismissed, to the decree-holder and not to the Official Assignee.[1]

16. Effect of stay order.—The jurisdiction of a Court to deal with further proceedings under the decree ceases when the appellate Court stays such proceedings, and an order passed while the stay order is in force is without jurisdiction.[1] Where the stay order is conditional on security being given, it does not come into operation till such security is given and does not affect the validity of a sale held after the order for stay and before the giving of the security.[2] Where an order for stay is set aside on the ground of fraud the effect is, as if the stay had never been ordered at all. Therefore, a sale held while the order was in force, is valid.[3] The appointment of a receiver does not operate as a stay of execution.[4]

17. Effect of uncommunicated order staying execution.—There is a conflict of decisions on the question whether execution proceedings held by a Court after the passing of an order for stay, but before the communication thereof to the Court are valid. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that an order for stay of execution takes effect as soon as it is passed and not after it has reached the executing Court, and that therefore, a sale held after an order for stay has been passed but before it reaches the execution Court is invalid.[1] According to the Madras High Court an order for stay of execution operates only from the time it is communicated to the executing Court and hence, a sale held before such communication, is not invalid.[2] A similar view has been taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court.[3] But an opinion was expressed therein that if the decree-holder himself was the purchaser, the sale would not be valid as he takes the property subject to all orders made in the suit. The Bombay High Court has held that it is difficult to lay down a principle as to the moment of operativeness of the stay order. According to that High Court, a great deal depends on the nature of the order, the question of good faith and other facts.[4] According to the Lahore High Court a sale held before the stay order reaches the auctioneer is valid.[5]

18. Costs of application.—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that, in the absence of special circumstances, the general rule is that the costs of the application for stay should be costs in the appeal.[1] The High Court of Calcutta has, on the other hand, held that the order for stay is only an indulgence shown to the appellant and, therefore, he should be made to pay the costs thereof even though he is successful in his application.[2]

19. Appeal.—The question whether an order granting or refusing stay of execution is appealable or not depends upon the question whether such an order falls within S. 47. As to this, see generally Notes 44, 84 and 86 to S. 47 and the undermentioned cases.[1] It was held in the undermentioned case that an order rejecting the security offered and ordering execution to continue is not one amounting to a refusal to stay the execution of the decree and is not, therefore, appealable as a decree under S. 47.[2]

20. Letters Patent Appeal.—An order granting or refusing stay of execution is a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent and is appealable as such.[1] An order relating to the sufficiency of the security tendered does not come within the purview of S. 47 of the Code nor is it a "judgment" within the meaning of the Letters Patent.[2]

Appeal to the Privy Council.—An order refusing to stay execution is not a "final order" within the meaning of Cl. (a) of S. 109 of the Code.[3]

21. Revision.—This rule does not apply to applications for revision.[1] But, as has been seen in Note 2 above, the Court has an inherent power of stay under S. 151.[2]

Security in case of order for execution of decree appealed from.

R. 6. [S. 546.] (1) Where an order is made for the execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security[4] to be taken for the restitution[3] of any property which may be or has been taken in execution[5] of the decree or for the payment of the value of such property and for the due performance of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, or the Appellate Court may for like cause direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security.

(2) Where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree, and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor to the Court which made the order, be stayed[8] on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of.

Effect of stay of sale. See Note 8, Pt. (4). Powers of the appellate Court. See Note 2, Pt. (3-a) and Note 9, Pt. (2).

1. Legislative changes.—

The present rule corresponds to S. 546 of the old Code, subject to the following changes:—

1. The words "or has been taken" have been added in sub-R. (1). See Note 5, infra.
2. The words "for money" which occurred after the words "in execution of a decree" in the third para. of the old section [corresponding to sub-R. (2) of the present rule] have been omitted. Hence, sub-R. (2) applies to all decrees whether they are decrees for the payment of money or not. The decisions under the old section bearing upon the meaning of the expression "decree for money"[1] are only of acadamic interest now.

3. The words "to the Court which made the order" in sub-R. (2) are new. See Note 9, infra.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—In order that this rule may apply it is essential that an appeal should be pending against the decree under execution, and an order should have been made for the execution of the decree. Where, therefore, no appeal has been filed against the decree,[1] or where no order for execution has been made,[2] there can be no order for security for restitution under this rule. Where an appeal is only against a part of the decree, an order for security for restitution cannot be passed with reference to the portion not appealed against.[3] It is competent for the trial Court as well as the appellate Court to pass an order for security under this rule. There is, however, a distinction between the powers of the two Courts. The Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown, require security, while the appellate Court may, for like cause, direct the trial Court to take security. The rule applies only to parties to the suit.[3-a]

Pending an appeal to the Privy Council, the trial Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order for security under this rule. The matter is governed by the provisions of O. 45 and not by this order.[4]

3. Restitution.—See S. 144, ante.

4. Security.—A surety is not discharged merely by reason of the death of the decree-holder.[1] Where under a decree for redemption, the mortgagor decree-holder deposits the mortgage money in Court and applies for execution of the decree, the money so deposited can be accepted as security for restitution under this rule.[2] Where the holder of a decree for money is willing to give security for restitution, the Court should not ordinarily grant a stay of execution of the decree.[3] As to the extent of the liability of the surety, see Note 8 to S. 145 and the case cited below.[4]

5. "Property which may be or has been taken in execution".—The words in the rule "or has been taken" are new and make it clear that security for restitution may be ordered even after property has passed into the hands of the decree-holder in execution of his decree.[1] They give effect to the case cited below[2] under the Code of 1882. The view seems to have been the same even under the previous Codes.[3]

6. Registration and attestation of security bond.—See O. 41, R. 5.

7. Mode of enforcement of security bond.—See Notes to S. 145, ante.

8. Stay of sale of immovable property.—Sub-R. (2) is a mandatory provision. It is, therefore, incumbent on the Court to stay the sale of immovable property, on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as it thinks fit.[1] An order for stay of sale can be passed even where the sale has already taken place, provided it has not been confirmed.[2] The sub-rule applies also to sale of immovable property in execution of a mortgage decree.[3]

An order for the stay of sale of immovable property under this rule does not preclude the execution of the decree in other ways, e.g., by proceeding against the movables of the judgment-debtor.[4] Where, on the rejection of a claim petition in execution proceedings, the claimant filed a suit for a declaration of his title, and on its being dismissed, appealed from the decree, and, pending the appeal, applied for a stay of sale, it was held that the sale could not be stayed, inasmuch as the rule applied only where the appeal was against the decree which was to be executed and not where the decree appealed from was different from the decree to be executed.[5]

9. Petition to stay sale where to be made.—The words "to the Court which made the order" in sub-R. (2) which are new, show that an application for stay of sale under that sub-rule should be made to the executing Court and not to the appellate Court.[1] This is in accordance with the following decisions under the old Code.[1-a] But the Madras High Court has held that the appellate Court can direct a stay of sale of immovable property by virtue of its general powers under O. 41, R. 5.[2]

The Court cannot, under this rule stay the sale in execution of a decree passed by another Court in another suit.[3]

10. Appeal.—An order requiring security to be given for restitution is one falling within S. 47 and is appealable. [See Note 71-A, Pt. (21) to S. 47, ante.] An order accepting or refusing to accept security is, however, not appealable either as a decree or under S. 47 of the Code.[1]

A surety against whom a decree is sought to be executed under S. 145 can, by virtue of that section, appeal from an order made against him in execution proceedings.[1-a]

A judgment-debtor at whose instance a sale was stayed cannot subsequently appeal from the stay order even assuming such an order is otherwise appealable.[2]

12. Revision.—Where the Court refuses an application under sub-R. (2) of this rule, and declines to stay execution pending appeal, the High Court can, under S. 115, revise the order and direct execution to be stayed on the judgment-debtor furnishing security.[1]

Synopsis.

1. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule is new and gives effect to the following decisions under the old Code.[1] It makes the provisions of Rr. 5 and 6 applicable mutatis mutandis to cases in which the appeal is not from the decree (as contemplated by those rules) but from an order in execution of the decree.[2]

Under the rules framed by the High Court of Patna, the Registrar has no power to hear an application under this rule.[3]

PROCEDURE ON ADMISSION OF APPEAL.

O. 41, R. 9. Notes 1—2.

Registry of memorandum of appeal.

R. 9. [S. 548.] (1) Where a memorandum of appeal is admitted, the Appellate Court or the proper officer of that Court shall endorse thereon the date of presentation, and shall register the appeal in a book to be kept for the purpose.

Register of Appeals.

(2) Such books shall be called the Register of Appeals.

[1877—S. 548; 1859—S. 341.]

Synopsis.

1. Registration of appeal.
2. Ex parte admission of appeal—Power to dismiss appeal subsequently on ground of limitation.
3. Second appeal from order of rejection.
4. Withdrawal of appeal after registration.

Power of Sub-Judge to dismiss on ground of limitation. See Note 2, Pt. (3).

1. Registration of appeal.—The registration of an appeal is a purely ministerial act. The Court can reject an appeal after it has been registered.[1]

2. Ex parte admission of appeal—Power to dismiss appeal subsequently on ground of limitation.—Where an appeal is presented after the expiry of the period of limitation along with an application to excuse the delay under S. 5 of the Limitation Act, the question of excusing the delay ought to be determined at the stage of admission of the appeal after notice to the respondent.[1] Where, however, ex parte order is made admitting such an appeal the Court can again go into the question of limitation at the hearing of the appeal and dismiss it if there is no sufficient ground for excusing the delay.[2] Where a District Judge admits such an appeal ex parte, and the appeal is thereafter transferred to a Subordinate Judge for disposal, the latter has power to dismiss the appeal on the ground of limitation.[3]

3. Second appeal from order of rejection.—An order refusing to admit an appeal under this rule and rejecting it is a decree and is open to appeal.[1] See Note 13 to S. 2, sub-S. (2), ante.

O. 41, R. 10.

Appellate Court may require appellant to furnish security for costs.

R. 10. [S. 549.] (1) The Appellate Court[2] may in its discretion,[1,6] either before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer or afterwards on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both:

Where appellant resides out of British India.

Provided that the Court shall demand such security in all cases in which the appellant is residing out of British India, and is not possessed of any sufficient immovable property within British India other than the property (if any) to which the appeal relates.

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal.[11]

1. Scope and object of the rule.—In Lekha v. Bhauna, I. L. R. 18 All. 101, which was a case under S. 549 of the old Code corresponding to this rule, Edge, C. J., observed as follows:—

> "The object of that section was to secure the respondent in an appeal from the risk of having to incur further costs which he might never succeed in getting out of the appellant . . . . . . It was intended under the first paragraph that the Court should have entire discretion in all cases not coming under the second paragraph, in making or refusing an order for security for costs. Under the second paragraph which is the proviso to the first, the Court is given no discretion in the matter. In cases falling within that proviso the Court has to follow the mandate of the statute and make an order for security for costs. An order for security for costs having been made under either the first paragraph or the second it is by the third paragraph of the section enacted that if such security be not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal. There again the Court is given no discretion in the matter."[1] Compare O. 25, Rr. 1 and 2.

O.41, R.10. Notes 1—4.

Under this rule security for costs can be demanded either before or after the respondent is called upon to appear and answer.[2] Further, the security may be for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit or of both.[3]

An order for security for costs can be passed under the rule only against the appellant. No such order can be passed against the respondent.[4] Nor can the Court demand, even from the appellant, security for the entire decree amount. Thus, the Court cannot, while admitting an appeal under R. 11, of this order issue notice to the respondent conditional on payment by the appellant of the decretal amount plus a sum of Rs. 500 as security for the costs of the respondent.[5]

2. To what appeals the rule applies.—This rule applies to appeals from decrees. By S. 2, sub-S. (2) an order determining any question under S. 47 is also a decree. It follows that this rule will apply to appeals from orders under S. 47.[1] By virtue of O. 43, R. 2, infra this rule will apply also to appeals from orders other than those falling under S. 47.

3. Appeals in forma pauperis.—There is a conflict of opinion as to the applicability of the rule to appeals in forma pauperis. According to the High Courts of Madras[1] and Rangoon[2] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[3] the rule applies to pauper appeals but the Court should not make an order for security except for very special reasons, such as, the appeal being a speculative one and the pauper, a mere puppet in the hands of persons well able to find security.[4] The High Courts of Calcutta,[5] Bombay[6] and Lahore[7] have, on the other hand, held that O. 41, R. 10 does not apply to appeals by paupers.

4. Insolvency appeals.—This rule applies also to an appeal from an order passed by a Judge of the High Court exercising jurisdiction in insolvency under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909.[1]

5—6.

5. Letters Patent Appeals.—The rule applies to appeals under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent[1] unless the rules framed by the particular High Court are inconsistent therewith, in which case, the former will override the latter. R. 736 of the Bombay High Court which requires an appellant to deposit Rs. 500 as security for costs in all cases is not inconsistent with this rule and an appellant may be called upon, under that rule to furnish any additional security for costs that may be considered proper.[2] Similarly, R. 354 framed by the Madras High Court is not inconsistent with this rule.[3]

6. Grounds for demanding security.—As has been seen in Note 1 above, the Court has, in cases coming under the first paragraph of sub-R. (1), a discretion in the matter of demanding security for costs. But in view of the fact that the rule tends to restrict a party's right of appeal, it should be applied with great caution[1] and very satisfactory grounds should be shown before making an order for security under this rule.[2] The discretion is not an arbitrary one but must be exercised in accordance with sound judicial principles.[3] The Appellate Court may well be guided in the exercise of such discretion by the provisions of O. 25, R. 1.[4] The following have been held not to be sufficient grounds for making an order for security under this rule:—

(1) The mere fact that the appellant may lose and may not pay the costs of the appeal[5] or that the appellant is an undischarged insolvent[6] or is a poor man from whom, if the appeal fails, it would be difficult to recover the costs of the appeal.[7] It was never intended by the Legislature in enacting this rule to

derogate from the right of appeal given by law to every person who is defeated in the Court of first instance.[8]

(2) The mere fact that a third person has incited the appeal[9] or that the appellant has parted with a portion of his interest in the subject-matter of the suit for the purpose of obtaining funds for the carrying on of the litigation[10] or that a relative of the appellant is assisting the appellant financially in the litigation[11] or that the appellant has rich relations who can afford to pay the decree amount.[12]

(3) The mere fact that the appellant has not paid the costs of the original suit.[13]

(4) The fact that one of the appellants is a female.[14]

From the above cases it is clear that mere poverty is no ground for ordering security. But poverty along with other circumstances may justify an order under this rule.[15] Thus where the appellant is proved to be a mere puppet in the hands of others who are promoting the litigation from behind the scenes[16] or where there is evidence of facts which cast doubts on the honesty and bona fides of the appellant, or the appeal is vexatious,[17] the appellant may be ordered to furnish security under this rule. Where the parties have agreed that security for costs should be given, the Court should pass an order for security under this rule.[18]

Although mere poverty of the appellant is no ground for ordering security for the costs of the appeal, it is also on the other hand not a ground for dispensing with security where such security is necessary in the circumstances of the case.[19]

Security for costs should not be ordered where the consequences of such an order would be unduly penal.[20]

7. Delay in applying for security.—The respondent should be prompt in taking advantage of this rule and must apply for security for costs, before he himself or the appellant incurs costs in the appeal.[1] Any delay on his part will be construed as a waiver by him of his right under this rule.[2]

8. Notice to show cause.—It is a fundamental principle of law that no order can be passed against a person without giving him an opportunity to be heard in defence. Hence, an order for security for costs of an appeal cannot be passed against a person without giving him notice to show cause why such an order should not be made.[1] A mere notice to show cause does not amount to a demand and, if the order for security is passed in his absence, he cannot be held to have failed to comply with the order if it was not communicated to him.[2]

9. Amount of security.—An order under this rule may direct a specified amount to be paid into Court as security for costs.[1] It is, however, not necessary in all cases to specify the sum for which security must be given. It is enough if the order directs security to be given for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit or of both.[1-a] A surety under this rule is discharged as soon as the appeal is allowed; the liability is not revived merely because the appellate order is reversed by a higher Court.[2] The Taxing Officer's decision as to the amount for which security should be given is subject to revision by the High Court.[3]

In Bombay, the practice is not to require security proportionate to the estimated costs of appeal but to require generally a security of only Rs. 500.[4]

10. Extension of time for furnishing security.—The Court may, in its discretion, enlarge the time allowed for furnishing the security ordered[1] and this may be done even though the period originally fixed has expired.[2] (See S. 148.) But when once an appeal has been rejected for failure to give the security ordered, it is not thereafter open to the Court to extend the time for furnishing security.[3]

As to the circumstances which would justify extension of time, it is a matter purely in the discretion of the Court.[4] Thus, when the period fixed expires on a day on which the offices of the Court are closed for business, the security may be accepted on the reopening day.[5] Similarly where the appellant applied for extension of time on the ground that, on account of the prevalence of plague in Bombay he was not able to arrange for the security, it was held that time should be extended.[6] That the appellant is a wandering Fakir is no excuse for not furnishing the security in time; it is the duty of every litigant to keep in touch with his case.[7]

11. Dismissal of appeal for failure to give security.—On appellant's failure to give the security within the period fixed, the Court is bound, under sub-R. (2) to reject the appeal.[1] A special application by the respondent to have the appeal rejected is not necessary, and he can raise the objection at the hearing of the appeal.[2] Where the period fixed for giving security expired during the long vacation but the Court office was open during the vacation, it was held that it was not a compliance with the order if the security is given on the reopening day and that the appeal should be rejected.[3] Where the security bond furnished was not drawn up in the terms of the Judge's order, it was held that there was a failure to give security and that the appeal should be rejected.[4] But an appeal should not be rejected merely for a clerical error in the security bond and the error should be allowed to be corrected.[5] In the undermentioned case[6] where it was objected that the executant of the security bond had not been duly authorised to execute it on behalf of the appellant, the Privy Council held that the case should have been adjourned till a proper bond was executed and that the appeal should not have been summarily rejected. The appeal should not be rejected if the order for security has been passed without giving notice to the appellant.[7] (See Note 8, supra). A mere notice to show cause does not amount to a demand for security and where an order for security is passed in the appellant's absence, the order must be communicated to him before he can be held to have failed to comply with it.[8] Reasonable opportunity should be given to the appellant to furnish the security and where it is not given and the appeal is dismissed for the appellant's failure to comply with the order for security, the High Court can interfere in revision.[9]

Once an appeal is dismissed for failure to give security for costs, the Court cannot afterwards extend the time for giving security.[10]

12. Restoration of appeal so rejected.—Under S. 107 (2) read with O. 25, R. 2 (2) the Appellate Court may, in its discretion, restore an appeal which has been rejected for failure to give security for costs.[1] But where the appellant's application for extension of time has been heard and dismissed, on the merits, an application for restoration of the appeal rejected for failure to furnish security will be barred.[2] An order restoring an appeal rejected under sub-R. (2) will not bind the respondent if it is made without notice to him.[3]

13. Limitation for application for restoration.—It has been held by the Madras High Court that Art. 168 of the Limitation Act applies to an application for the restoration of an appeal dismissed for failure to furnish security under this rule.[1] Even if Art. 168 be held not to apply, the application ought to be made within a reasonable time and ordinarily would be too late after thirty days from the date of dismissal.[2]

14. Appeal.—An order rejecting an appeal for failure to furnish security for costs is not appealable either as an order under S. 104 or as a decree.[1] Nor is such an order covered by Ss. 109 and 110, ante so as to be appealable to the Privy Council.[2] No appeal lies against an order restoring[3] or refusing to restore[4] an appeal rejected under sub-R. (2) for failure to give security.

Letters Patent Appeal.—An order dismissing a petition asking the Court to receive a sum of money as security for the costs of an appeal is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable as such.[5]

15. Stamp and registration.—See Arts. 15 and 57 Sch. I of the Stamp Act, 1899[1] and Art. 6, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870. In cases where a security bond is compulsorily registrable, it is not necessary to register the bond until the security has been accepted.[2]

16. Practice.—The usual procedure followed when ordering security for costs under this rule is that the respondent first obtains a rule nisi on affidavit as to the facts on which he relies. On the day fixed for hearing, the appellant shows cause and the respondent then replies. The respondent has a right of reply though the appellant has used no affidavit.[1] If neither party appears on the day fixed for hearing the rule nisi and the rule is discharged in consequence, it can be restored if a sufficient cause for the non-appearance of the applicant be shown.[2]

17. Enforcement of security.—Under S. 145 of the Code, the liability of a surety under a security bond given under this rule can be enforced by summary proceedings in execution and a separate suit is not necessary for the purpose.[1] But the remedy by suit is also available and a suit against the surety is maintainable though execution of the decree against the judgment-debtor is barred by limitation. See Note 11 to S. 145, ante.

Dismissal after issue of notice to respondent, whether legal. See Note 2, Pt. (4-a).

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words in sub-R. (1) "after sending for the record if it thinks fit so to do" are new. This makes it clear that the Court is not bound to send for the record in any case. (See Note 3.)
2. In sub-R. (2) the words "the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed" have been substituted for the words "the appeal shall be dismissed for default". This makes it clear that when an appeal is dismissed under sub-R. (2) the order is merely an order of dismissal for default and not a decree and hence is not appealable. [See S. 2, sub-S. (2).]

2. Scope and object of the rule.—This rule refers to a stage after the memorandum of appeal has been admitted, and the appeal has been registered under R. 9, ante.[1] It applies also to Letters Patent Appeals where the rules of the High Court do not prohibit its application to them.[2] But the rule does not apply to the summary dismissal of an appeal under S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.[3] An order of dismissal for the appellant's failure to make the necessary deposit for printing may be covered by this rule or R. 16.[4] The procedure of the rule is not applicable to a case where notice of the appeal has been issued to the respondent.[4-a] The rule contemplates the dismissal of an appeal. Hence pending an appeal by the defendant, the summary dismissal by the appellate Court, of plaintiff's suit as not being properly stamped, is irregular.[5] The rule applies also to proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act, III of 1926, but the Board is not bound under that Act to hear any party before rejecting an appeal summarily.

3. "After sending for the record".—The words in sub-R. (1) "after sending for the record if it thinks fit so to do" are new. But even prior to the present Code, it was held that it was not obligatory on the appellate Court to send for the record in every case, in which it summarily dismissed the appeal.[1] But when the record has been lost and the appeal has been dismissed in consequence, the appeal should be retried when the record is found.[2]

4. "May dismiss the appeal".—The discretion given by this rule is a judicial discretion and not an arbitrary discretion.[1] It should be very sparingly used and only in exceptional cases.[2]

A pre-emption suit was decreed on condition of plaintiff paying the pre-emption money within a month from the decree. The plaintiff appealed against the condition but the appeal was dismissed on the ground that the money had not been paid within one month. It was held that the suit should not have been dismissed on that ground inasmuch as the condition of payment of money within one month was itself the subject of appeal.[3] Where the High Court in dismissing under this rule, an appeal from an order of remand, reframed a certain issue it was held that the procedure adopted though irregular, was not ultra vires.[4]

5. Notice to appellant.—An appeal should not be dismissed under this rule unless notice of the day of hearing has been given to the appellant or his pleader.[1] The mere fact that the appellant on the day of filing the appeal may say that he does not intend to appear at the preliminary hearing, is no justification for the failure to give notice.[2]

6. Judgment, if should be written.—See O. 41, R. 31, Note 9.

7. Time-barred appeal.—An appeal cannot be rejected on the ground of limitation, at the time of admission, without fixing a date for hearing the appellant. If the Judge thinks that the appeal is too late, he should admit the appeal if it is otherwise valid, and fix a date for hearing the appellant on the question of limitation under R. 11 before issuing notice to the respondent.[1] The rejection of an appeal under R. 11 as being time-barred is equivalent to a dismissal thereof and such an Order is appealable.[2]

8. Order of dismissal, if a decree.—The dismissal of an appeal under this rule is a decree[1] and appealable as such[2] even if a formal judgment is not written under the provisions of R. 31, infra.

9. Effect of dismissal—Amendment of decree.—The dismissal of an appeal under this rule amounts to a decree, which supersedes the decree of the lower Court. Hence, after the dismissal, the decree can be amended only by the appellate Court and not by the lower Court.[1] The Bombay High Court has, however, held that the dismissal of an appeal under this rule leaves untouched the decree appealed from, and the lower Court alone can amend the decree notwithstanding such dismissal.[2] The High Court of Patna[3] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[4] have taken a similar view.

10. Effect of dismissal of appeal from mortgage decree.—See O. 34, R. 3.

11. Dismissal for default under sub-R. (2).—If the appellant or his pleader does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the appeal may be dismissed for default.[1] But when no notice of the date fixed for hearing has been given to the appellant, the appeal cannot be dismissed for default under sub-R. (2).[2] A dismissal for default implies the absence of the party or his pleader—so where the pleader of the appellant is present, but is unable through a physical disability to argue the case, and the appeal is dismissed, such dismissal is not for default.[3] Where an appeal is dismissed for default, it is the lower Court's decree that is the executable decree in the case.[4]

12. Re-admission of appeal dismissed for default.—Under R. 19, infra, an appeal dismissed for default under this rule may be re-admitted. See R. 19, infra.

13. Review.—The dismissal of an appeal under sub-R. 1 precludes the lower Court from entertaining an application for review of the decree because it cannot be said in such a case that no appeal was "preferred" within the meaning of S. 114 and O. 47, R. 1.[1]

But it is open to the appellate Court to review its order dismissing an appeal under sub-R. (1), and it is not necessary to send notice to the respondent before doing so.[2] An order granting a review of such an order of dismissal without notice to the respondent cannot be questioned by a different bench from that which granted the review.[3] When the dismissal of an appeal is set aside on review, the hearing of the appeal cannot be restricted to the grounds on which review was asked for.[4] Conversely the grounds urged in the application for review which were not raised in the original memorandum of appeal, cannot be argued at the hearing of the appeal after its restoration on review.[5] The summary rejection of an appeal as being time barred without fixing a date for hearing the appellant is in contravention of the law and forms a good ground for review.[6]

When a second appeal is dismissed under R. 11 (1) no application is maintainable for review of the Order on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter as the High Court in second appeal is bound by the findings of fact of the lower Court.[7]

14. Reference.—See the undermentioned case.[1]

15. Revision.—Where no decree is drawn up on the dismissal of an appeal under sub-R. (1) the so-called appeal from the order of dismissal may be treated as an application for revision.[1] In the undermentioned case[2] where the dismissal was due to a mistake of fact a revision was allowed.

16. Second appeal.—Summary rejection.—At the time of admitting a second appeal the admission Judge is entitled to consider whether any of the grounds mentioned in S. 100 and raised in the memorandum of appeal in fact exist and apply to the case before him and if they do not, to reject the appeal summarily[1] without fixing any date for hearing the appellant.

17. Restriction of grounds of appeal on admission.—A Court cannot, on admission of an appeal under R. 11, restrict the grounds on which the appeal is to be heard finally and any such restrictive order is ultra vires.[1] Where an appeal summarily dismissed under R. 11 is restored on review, the appellant is not confined at the hearing of the appeal, to the grounds taken by him in his application for review.[2]

18. Insolvency appeals.—The High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge to grant leave to appeal under S. 46 of the Insolvent Debtor's Act (11 and 12 Vic., C. 21) and if the District Judge refuses leave to appeal, the High Court may grant the same in which the appeal may be taken as "admitted" and there is no necessity to make a further application under O. 41.[1] There is nothing in the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) to interfere with any right of appeal to the Privy Council that might otherwise exist.[2]

O.41, R.12.

R. 12. [S. 552.] (1) Unless the Appellate Court dismisses the appeal under rule 11, it shall fix a day for hearing the appeal.

(2) Such day shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the respondent, and the time necessary for the service of the notice of appeal, so as to allow the respondent sufficient time to appear and answer the appeal on such day.

[1877—S. 552; 1859—S. 344.]

1. Day for hearing appeal.—Care should be taken not only in fixing the original date for the hearing of a case, but in altering the date of hearing so that none of the parties is taken by surprise. But there is nothing illegal in a Judge taking up an appeal on any day he chooses to fix so long as the parties or their pleaders have sufficient notice and no prejudice is caused.[1] When fixing a date for the hearing of the appeal under this rule, the appellate Court is not entitled to restrict the appeal to one or more of the grounds specified in the memorandum of appeal.[2]

It was held in it that an allegation that there is no evidence to support a specific finding of fact is a ground of law and where such a ground is taken in a memorandum of second appeal, the Court is not justified in summarily dismissing the appeal under R 19, Board's Circular 8—II, without giving notice to the parties].

1. Legislative changes:—

The words "where the appeal is not dismissed under R. 11" have been substituted for the words "when the memorandum of appeal is registered".

2. Scope of the rule.—If any part of the record has not been sent up by the lower Court and the appellant wishes to bring it before the appellate Court, he should ask the appellate Court to send for it before the day of trial.[1] When a notice of appeal is sent by the High Court to the Court below with instructions to make a return within a specified time, the appellant is entitled to the whole of the time allowed, and may deposit his talabana and cause service of the notices any time within the period limited. Where the appellant is denied this liberty by the lower Court, he ought to come before the High Court with a substantial application for orders.[2]

When the record has been lost at the time of the determination of an appeal, the appeal should be retried when the record is found again.[3]

"(3) Notwithstanding anything in sub-R. (1) it shall not be necessary to serve notice of any proceeding incidental to an appeal on any respondent, other than a person impleaded for the first time in the appellate Court, unless he has appeared and filed an address for service either in the trial Court or in the case of a second appeal, in the lower appellate Court, or has appeared in the appeal."

BENGAL.

Insert the following as Cl. (3):—

"(3) It shall be in the discretion of the appellate Court to make an order, at any stage of the appeal whether on its own motion, or ex parte, dispensing with service of such notice on any respondent who did not appear, either at the hearing in the Court whose decree is complained of or at any proceeding subsequent to the decree of that Court or on the legal representatives of any such respondent:

Provided that—

(a) The Court may require notice of the appeal to be published in any newspaper or newspapers as it may direct.

(b) No such order shall preclude any such respondent or legal representative from appearing to contest the appeal."

MADRAS.

Insert the following as a proviso to sub-R. (1):—

O. 41, R. 14.

"Provided that the appellate Court may dispense with service of notice on respondents against whom the suit has proceeded ex parte in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred."

NAGPUR.

To R. 14, the following sub-rule shall be added:—

"(3) The appellate Court may in its discretion dispense with notice to any respondent against whom the suit was heard ex parte."

N.-W. F. P.

Add the folowing proviso to sub-R. (1):—

"Provided that with the permission of the Court no notice need be served upon a respondent who was a pro forma defendant in a suit which was decided ex parte against him."

OUDH.

To R. 14, add the following sub-R. (3):—

"(3) Provided that in a case where a respondent has not appeared either during the hearing of the case in the Court from whose decree or order the appeal is preferred or at any proceeding subsequent to that decree, it shall only be necessary for the Court to make one attempt to effect personal service on such respondent or, if such respondent is dead, on his legal representative; and, thereafter service may be effected by affixing a notice in some conspicuous place in the Court-house of the District Judge within whose jurisdiction the suit or proceeding was instituted along with one or other of the following methods, namely, publishing the notice in a newspaper or affixing it to the wall or door of the chaupal of the village where the respondent last resided or any other method as the Court may direct."

PATNA.

Add the following as R. 14-A:—

"14-A. The appellate Court may, in its discretion, dispense with the service of notice hereinbefore required on a respondent, or on the legal representative of a deceased respondent, in a case where such respondent did not appear, either at any stage of the proceedings in the Court whose decree is appealed from or in any proceedings subsequent to the decree of that Court and no relief is claimed against such opposite party or respondent or his legal representative either in the original case or appeal."

RANGOON.

Add the following as sub-R. (3) to R. 14:—

"(3) Nothing in these rules requiring any notice to be served on or given to an opposite party or respondent shall be deemed to require any notice to be served on or given to an opposite party or respondent who did not appear either at the hearing in the Court whose decree is complained of or at any proceedings subsequent to the decree of that Court, or on or to the legal representative of any such opposite party or respondent if deceased."

SINDH.

Add the following as sub-R. (3) to R. 14 in O. 41:—

"(3) The appellate Court may, however, in its discretion, dispense with the service of notice of the appeal or interlocutory application therein, on a respondent or opponent who has made no appearance at the trial Court.

Add the following as R. 14-A in O. 41:—

"14-A. Subject to the leave of the appellate Court nothing in these rules requiring any notice to be served on or given to an opposite party or respondent shall be deemed to require any notice to be served on or given to the legal representative of any deceased opposite party or deceased respondent, where such opposite party or respondent did not appear, either at the hearing in the Court whose decree is complained of or at any proceedings subsequent to the decree of that Court."

Synopsis.

1. Service of notice.
2. Dismissal of appeal after return of notices as not served.
3. Form.

1. Service of notice.—An appeal cannot be heard and decided without fixing a date for such hearing or without giving the respondent due notice of such date.[1] But failure to give notice to an unnecessary respondent does not vitiate the appeal.[2] It is the duty of the appellant to give the correct address of the respondent. The latter is not bound to communicate his address to the Court or to the appellant and his omission to do so is not an abuse of the provisions of the Code.[3]

The service of notice on the respondent should be in the manner provided for the service of summons on a defendant.[4]

Service of notice of appeal on the respondent's pleader is sufficient.[5] Where a guardian ad litem of a minor has been appointed by the Court, notice of the appeal may be served on the guardian.[6]

2. Dismissal of appeal after return of notices as not served.—Under O. 9, R. 5, if a summons is returned unserved and the plaintiff does not apply for fresh summons within three months thereafter, the suit must be dismissed unless within those three months, the plaintiff satisfies the Court that there is a sufficient cause for extending the period for applying for fresh summons. This rule does not apply to appeals. Hence, although the appellant has applied neither for fresh notices nor for extension of time within the time allowable under O. 9, R. 5, the appeal need not be dismissed and the Court can excuse the delay and order fresh notices to issue.[1] Conversely, the appellant cannot claim to be entitled, as of right, to apply for fresh notices within the period allowed under O. 9, R. 5. If the appellant fails to take out fresh notices within the time ordered by the Court, the appeal can be disposed of under O. 17, R. 3, notwithstanding that the period allowable under O. 9, R. 5 has not expired.[2] If after the return of a notice of appeal as not served, the appellant makes undue delay in applying for fresh notices the appellate Court may refuse to issue fresh notice.[3] Where an appeal against a decree for joint possession of land is dismissed as against some of the respondents for failure to serve notice of appeal on them, the appeal cannot proceed even as against the others.[4] See Note 5 to O. 9, R. 5.

4. Hearing counsel of one party in the absence of the other.
5. Hearing of appeal before day fixed.
6. Effect of non-compliance with the rules relating to appeals.

1. Right to begin.—The mere fact that the respondent challenges the right of the appellant to appeal does not give the respondent the right to begin.[1] In the Calcutta High Court when the appellant's right to appeal is challenged, the practice is to require the respondent at the outset to indicate briefly the grounds upon which his objection is based.[2]

In every appeal the burden is on the appellant to show that the judgment of the lower Court is wrong[3] and this is so notwithstanding the fact that the records of the suit have been destroyed.[4]

Where there is a slip in the order in an appeal heard ex parte, the error will be attributed to the appellant.[5] Where an appeal is heard ex parte, it is the duty of the counsel for the appellant to bring to the notice of the Court all the authorities on the point, adverse as well as favourable.[6]

2. Respondent's failure to appear on day specified in notice of appeal.—A respondent who had not appeared on a date fixed for hearing but on which the appeal was not heard, is not precluded from appearing on any subsequent day to which the hearing may stand adjourned.[1]

3. "Shall be heard".—An appellant is not entitled to be heard on the merits, if the appeal is liable to be dismissed on a preliminary ground.[1] The Appellate Court is bound to hear the respondent before determining an appeal unless it dismisses the appeal at once.[2]

The rule does not compel the Court to permit written arguments to be filed.[3]

4. Hearing counsel of one party in the absence of the other.—The Court cannot, having regard to the provision contained in sub-R. (2), hear the arguments of the respondent's pleader alone in the absence of the appellant or his pleader and proceed to judgment without giving the latter an opportunity to reply. If the Court does so, it acts illegally and the judgment is not valid.[1]

5. Hearing of appeal before day fixed.—Where, subsequent to the adjournment of an appeal the hearing of the appeal is advanced without notice to the respondent, and the appeal is decided ex parte before the date to which it was adjourned, the respondent can have the ex parte decree set aside.[1] But the irregularity of deciding an appeal before the day fixed, will be condoned if the pleaders of both the parties were present and argued the case.[2]

If an appellate Court decides an appeal before the usual hour of commencing Court business and refuses to hear the appellant's counsel on his appearing in due time, it acts with grave irregularity.[3]

6. Effect of non-compliance with the rules relating to appeals.—If the rules of the Court relating to appeals have not been complied with and no adequate excuse is offered, the appeal should be dismissed.[1]

1. Legislative changes:—

The words "the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed" have been substituted for the words "the appeal shall be dismissed for default."

As to the effect of the change, see Notes 4 and 14, infra. Also Note 16 to S. 2, sub-S. (2).

2. Dismissal for default of appearance.—Under the old Code, where the appellant did not appear when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court was bound to dismiss the appeal. Under the present rule the Court is not bound to dismiss an appeal for default but may do so.[1] The rule applies not only to the date originally fixed for hearing the appeal but also to any date to which the hearing may have been adjourned. But it does not apply when the hearing has been completed and the case is merely adjourned for pronouncing judgment.[1-a]

An appeal cannot be dismissed for default, if the appellant is dead at the time because, the orders and rules dealing with the case of the non-appearance of a suitor are not applicable to the situation which arises when the suitor is dead.[2]

Applicability of rule to remanded appeal.—The rule applies also to a remanded appeal, and if the appellant fails to appear on the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal after remand, the appeal may be dismissed for default.[3] But where the appellate Court remands a case for further enquiry and fixes a date for the return of the report, it cannot dismiss the appeal in default, before that date for non-appearance of the appellant in the lower Court on the date fixed for the enquiry.[4] Where, however, a case is remanded to the lower appellate Court for disposal that Court is entitled to dismiss the appeal for default if the appellant does not appear before it on the date fixed for the hearing.[5]

3. "Appearance"—Meaning of.—See Notes to O. 3, R. 1.

4. Dismissal on merits illegal.—It was held under the former Code that the appellate Court had no power, in the absence of the appellant or his pleader, to dismiss the appeal on the merits, but could only dismiss it for default.[1] In the present rule, the words "the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed" have been substituted for the words "the appeal shall be dismissed for default" which occurred in the corresponding section, viz., S. 556 of the former Code. This change in the language of the rule has given rise to a conflict of decisions as to the power of an appellate Court to dismiss an appeal on the merits, if the appellant does not appear at the time of hearing. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[2] Calcutta,[3] Madras[4] and Rangoon[5] that the fact that the Court is not bound to dismiss an appeal for default does not enable it to dismiss the appeal on the merits, but only to adjourn it to another date. The High Court of Patna has, on the other hand, held that the powers of an appellate Court under the present rule as altered in the new Code are wide enough to include the power to dismiss the appeal on the merits if the appellate Court should think fit to do so.[6]

5. Compromise after dismissal for default.—An appeal was dismissed for default of both the parties. Subsequently the appellant applied to the Court for restoring the appeal and, pending the disposal of the application both the parties filed a petition of compromise praying for a decree in terms of the compromise. The Court subsequently rejected the application for restoring the appeal. It was held that in the circumstances of the case, the Court ought to have restored the case and given effect to the petition of compromise filed.[1]

6. Dismissal for default of prosecution.—Where the materials essential for the progress of an appeal such as supplying translations of vernacular documents, preparation of Bench copies, etc., are wanting owing to the appellant's default, the Court can dismiss the appeal for default of prosecution.[1]

In the undermentioned case[2] the High Court of Madras has held that under R. 105 of the Madras Appellate Side Rules, the High Court can dismiss a second appeal for failure to translate and print the necessary records. Such an order of dismissal is not ultra vires and does not contravene the provisions of this order.

7. Dismissal for default if affects cross-objections.—See Notes under O. 41, R. 22.

8. Dismissal for default of appeal from ex parte decree—Application to set aside ex parte decree.—The dismissal of an appeal for default is not a decree and, therefore, the decree of the Court of first instance is not superseded by or merged in the order of the appellate Court. Hence after an appeal from an ex parte decree has been dismissed for default the first Court can allow an application to set aside the ex parte decree.[1] See Note 11 to O. 9, R. 13, ante.

9. Effect of dismissal for default.—An order dismissing an appeal for default is not a decree and hence, the decree of the lower Court is not superseded by or merged in it.[1] See Note 16 to S. 2, [sub-S. (2)]. It will follow from this that the decree to be executed in such a case is the decree of the lower Court.[2] (See Note 5 to S. 38.) It will also follow that an application for amendment of the decree must be made to the lower Court and not to the appellate Court.[3] A contrary view has, however, been expressed by the High Court of Madras in the undermentioned case.[4] It is submitted that the view is not correct. On the dismissal of an appeal for default a fresh appeal from the same decree may be entertained, provided the period of limitation has not expired.[5]

The decision of the lower Court operates as res judicata although the appeal against it has been dismissed, not on the merits, but for default.[6]

10—14.

10. Notice of date for hearing appeal.—The appellant must have due notice of the date of hearing.[1] Where no date has been fixed for the hearing of an appeal, the appellate Court has no power to dismiss the appeal for default. (See R. 12, infra.)[2] Where an appeal has been remanded for hearing, it is the duty of the parties to apply to the Court to fix a date for the hearing of the appeal or to ascertain from the Court what date has been fixed therefor.[3] An appeal may be taken up and disposed of before the appointed day if the pleaders of the parties are present and argue the case without objection.[4] Notice of the date of hearing must be given to the respondent before the appeal can be decided ex parte. (See R. 14, ante.)[5]

11. Restoration of appeal dismissed for default.—See R. 19, post.

12. Re-hearing of appeal decided ex parte.—See R. 21, below.

13. Hearing of appeal ex parte—Sub-R. (2).—The absence of the respondent on the date fixed for hearing is not by itself, a ground for deciding the appeal in appellant's favour. The Court must go into the merits of the case and record a judgment.[1]

14. Appeal.—Under the former Code there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an appeal lay against an order dismissing an appeal for default, some cases holding that such an order was a decree and as such appealable[1] while other cases holding a contrary view.[2] The definition of a decree in S. 2 (2) in the present Code expressly provides that an order of dismissal for default does not amount to a decree. Also, in the present rule the words "the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed" have been substituted for the words "the appeal shall be dismissed for default" which occurred in the old section. Reading, S. 2 (2) and O. 41, R. 17 together, it is clear that an order dismissing an appeal for default is not a decree. Nor is it one of the appealable orders referred to in S. 104. Hence, no appeal lies from such an order.[3] The proper procedure to set aside the order is to apply under R. 19, infra.

Where an appeal is dismissed on the merits, the order is a decree and is appealable as such, notwithstanding that the Court ought to have dismissed the appeal for default and not on the merits.[4] But in some old decisions it was held that in such cases, the order, though dismissing the appeal on the merits, must nevertheless be regarded as an order dismissing the appeal for default.[5]

An appeal was dismissed as against some of the respondents on the ground of want of proper service of notice on them. When the appeal came on for hearing against the other respondents, it was dismissed on the ground that it was not maintainable against them alone. Held, that in an appeal against the decree of dismissal, the previous order dismissing the appeal against some of the respondents could be attacked under S. 105.[6]

An order dismissing an appeal for failure to pay the deficiency in the stamp for the appeal is an order of rejection of the appeal and as such constitutes a decree.[7] [See S. 2 (2).] It has been held by the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court[8] that when an appeal is dismissed under an erroneous impression as to procedural law, an appeal lies from the order of dismissal, because the effect in such a case is that of dismissal on a preliminary point. (See Notes under R. 11, supra.)

Dismissal of appeal where notice not served in consequence of appellant's failure to deposit costs.

R. 18. [S. 557.] Where on the day fixed,[2] or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, it is found that the notice to the respondent has not been served in consequence of the failure of the appellant to deposit, within the period fixed, the sum required to defray the cost of serving the notice, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed.

Provided that no such order shall be made although the notice has not been served upon the respondent, if on any such day the respondent appears when the appeal is called on for hearing.

[1877—S. 557; 1861—S. 5.]

Local Amendment.

MADRAS.

In R. 18, after the words "cost of serving the notice" insert the words "or if the notice is returned unserved, to deposit within any subsequent period fixed the sum required to defray the cost of any further attempt to serve the notice."

Synopsis.

1. Dismissal for default in depositing cost of notice.
2. Appeal cannot be dismissed before day fixed for hearing.
3. Effect of dismissal of appeal against one of several respondents.
4. Dismissal for failure to supply identifier.
5. Re-admission of appeal dismissed. See R. 19 below.
6. Appeal.
7. Revision.

1. Dismissal for default in depositing cost of notice.—This rule enables the appellate Court to dismiss an appeal only when the process fees for service of notice on the respondent have not been deposited. But it does not warrant the dismissal of an appeal merely because the appellant has not filed the notice required to be filed by the circular orders in the Court for the purpose of issuing process.[1] An appeal is liable to be dismissed for default in depositing the cost of notice although the default was committed by an ignorant business agent of the appellant.[2]

An order of dismissal cannot be made under this rule unless the appellate Court has fixed a date by which the cost of notice is to be paid.[3]

2. Appeal cannot be dismissed before day fixed for hearing.—An order of dismissal cannot be made under the rule before the date fixed for hearing, merely because the appellant has failed to deposit the cost of notice within the time fixed by the Court.[1]

3. Effect of dismissal of appeal against one of several respondents.—Where a decree for joint possession is passed in favour of three respondents, and the appeal from the decree is dismissed as against one of them for failure to serve notice on him, the appeal cannot proceed against the other two respondents; the reason is that even if the decree is set aside in the appeal against them, the entire decree which is a joint one, can be executed by the other respondent so as to nullify the decree of the appellate Court.[1]

4. Dismissal for failure to supply identifier.—The default referred to in the rule is default in paying the cost of notice before the time fixed. Hence, an appeal cannot be dismissed under the rule on account of the appellant's failure to supply an identifier for identifying the respondent to the process server.[1]

5. Re-admission of appeal dismissed.—See R. 19, below.

6. Appeal.—No appeal lies against an order under this rule. The proper remedy is under R. 19.[1]

7. Revision.—Before an appellate Court can dismiss an appeal under this rule it must fix a date by which the process fees are to be paid. If it does not do so, its order of dismissal can be set aside in revision. Where, however, the appellant fails to pay the process fees even on the date of the hearing of the appeal and also omits to plead that the non-payment was due to the fact that he had not been directed to pay by any fixed date, the order of the appellate Court will not be interfered with in revision.[1]

Local Amendment.

MADRAS.

Re-number R. 19 as 19 (1) and insert the following as sub-R. (2):—

"(2) The provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to applications under sub-R. (1)."

Synopsis.

1. Scope and applicability of rule.
2. "Shall re-admit the appeal."
3. Sufficient cause.
4. Court to which application for restoration is to be made.
5. Notice.
6. Dismissal for failure to deposit cost of paper book or to pay Court-fees.
7. Inherent power to restore appeal dismissed for default. See S. 151, Note 2.
8. Other remedy.
9. Limitation.
10. Appeal.

Summary rejection of application to restore—If proper. See Note 3, Pt. (1).

1. Scope and applicability of rule.—This rule applies only where an appeal has been dismissed under any of the rules specified therein.[1] O. 41, R. 17 does not apply when the arguments have been heard. Hence the dismissal of an appeal in default when the arguments have been heard is not covered by R. 17 and this rule does not therefore apply to such a case.[2]

2. "Shall re-admit the appeal".—The expression used in the corresponding section of the former Code, viz., S. 558, was "may re-admit the appeal." Nevertheless it was held by the Madras High Court under the old Code that the Court was bound to restore the appeal if "sufficient cause" was established.[1] In the present rule, legislative effect is given to this view.[2]

3. Sufficient cause.—See Note 8 to O. 9, R. 9, ante.

When an application is made to restore an appeal dismissed for default, the Court should not reject the application summarily, but should give the applicant an opportunity to substantiate his allegations, as to sufficient cause. A summary rejection without enquiry is improper.[1]

As to what amounts to "sufficient cause," see the undermentioned cases.[2]

4. Court to which application for restoration is to be made.—The application must be made to the Court which dismissed the appeal for default.[1]

5. Notice.—O. 9, R. 9, lays down, that notice must be given to the defendant before a suit dismissed for default of plaintiff's appearance is restored. In the undermentioned case[1] it was held by the Allahabad High Court that even if O. 9, R. 9 be held to apply to appeals by force of S. 107, sub-S. (2), notice is not necessary for the restoration of an appeal dismissed for default owing to the absence of both the parties. But the propriety of an ex parte order setting aside an order of dismissal for default may be questioned at the hearing of the appeal.[2] The dismissal of an appeal for failure to pay the deficit Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal is not a dismissal for default. An application for restoration in such a case is not covered by this rule but is an application for review under O. 47 and notice to the opposite party is necessary.[3]

6. Dismissal for failure to deposit cost of paper book or to pay Court-fees.—This rule applies, as has been in Note 1 above only where the dismissal has been under any of the rules specified therein. Hence, the rule does not apply where an appeal has been dismissed under the High Court rules for failure to deposit the cost of preparing the paper book. The remedy in such a case is not by an application under this rule but by an application for review.[1] Similarly, where an appeal is dismissed for failure to pay deficit Court-fees within the time allowed by the Court, the appeal cannot be restored under this rule.[2]

7. Inherent power to restore appeal dismissed for default.—See S. 151, Note 2.

8. Other remedy.—When an appeal is dismissed for default the applicant may present a fresh appeal provided the period of limitation for an appeal has not expired. He is not confined to his remedy under this rule.[1] An appellant whose appeal has been dismissed for default may also apply for review in a proper case. The Allahabad High Court has held that when the appellant has allowed his remedy under this rule to become time-barred he cannot come by way of an application for review.[2] But the Punjab Chief Court has held a contrary view.[3]

In an application for restoration under this rule the only thing that the Court can consider is whether there was "sufficient cause" for appellant's default. Questions as to the legality of the order of dismissal can only be raised in an application for review.[4]

9. Limitation.—An application for restoration of an appeal under this rule is governed by Art. 168 of the Limitation Act[1] and must be filed within 30 days from the date of the dismissal of the appeal.[2] The Court has no power to enlarge the said period.[3] Proceedings taken on an application filed after the period of limitation are invalid.[4] An application for re-admission made not under S. 558 (O. 41, R. 19) but under the rules of the Court, is not governed by Art. 168 and is not subject to any law of limitation.[5]

Where the order of dismissal is ultra vires Art. 168 does not apply.[6] Thus, an appeal cannot be dismissed for default where the appellant is dead. Where an appeal is dismissed for default under such circumstances, the appellant's legal representatives need not apply for restoration within the period of 30 days allowed under Art. 168. The order of dismissal is no bar to the application of the legal representatives to be brought on the record and such an application is governed by Art. 176 of the Limitation Act.[7] The provisions of S. 5 of the Limitation Act[8] or of S. 6 of that Act[9] do not apply to an application under this rule.

See, however, the amendments of this rule by the High Court of Madras.

10. Appeal.—No appeal lies against an order granting an application for restoration of an appeal under this rule.[1] An order refusing such an application is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (t).[2] But no appeal lies against an order refusing an application for restoration to which this rule does not apply.[3]

An appeal lies against an order refusing to restore an insolvency appeal dismissed for default, because by virtue of S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. 1920, the general procedure applicable to insolvency cases is that laid down

7. Adding party for the purpose of cross-objections—See Note 21 to O. 41, R. 22.
8. "Inherent power to add parties."
9. Power to pass decree against party—See R. 4, ante, and R. 33, post.
10. Effect of non-joinder.
11. Limitation.
12. Addition of parties in second appeal.

1. Scope and applicability of the rule.—This rule does not apply to the addition of fresh parties by the Court of first instance after the case is remanded to it by the appellate Court for re-trial.[1] (See also Note 4, infra.)

1-a. "At the hearing".—The power to add parties under this rule is to be exercised at the hearing, for, it is necessary that before acting under this rule the Court should have before it all the circumstances of the case.[1] The rule does not contemplate the addition of a party after the judgment has been pronounced.[2]

2. "Any person who was a party to the suit".—The rule applies only when the proposed party respondent was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred.[1] On the question whether apart from R. 20, the appellate Court has power to add as respondent to the appeal persons who were not parties to the suit in the Court below, there is a conflict of decisions. According to the High Courts of Calcutta[2] and Patna[3] the appellate Court has such power independently of this rule to add as respondents to the appeal persons who were not parties to the suit in the Court of first instance. The High Courts of Allahabad,[4] Bombay[5] and Lahore[6] have, on the other hand, held that the appellate Court has no such power. The High Court of Rangoon also seems to be of the same view.[7] It is submitted that the Calcutta and Patna view is correct. However, there is nothing to prevent the appellate Court, in a proper case, to remand the case to the lower Court with a direction to add the omitted parties.[8] Further in a case where a person can be added as a respondent to an appeal by virtue of the Provisions of O. 22, R. 10, there is no objection to his being so added though he was not a party to the suit in the lower Court.[9] Persons who were parties to the suit in the lower Court originally but whose names were struck off before the passing of the decree are nevertheless parties to the suit within the meaning of R. 20.[10]

The words "any person who was a party to the suit" include the representative of such a party.[11] (See also Note 12, below.)

3. "Interested in the result of the appeal".—Before the Privy Council decision in Chokalingam v. Scethai[1] there was a conflict of decisions as to the meaning of these words. One set of decisions proceeded upon the view that the fact that the presence of the proposed party respondent before the Court was necessary for the adequate disposal of the appeal or cross-objections on the merits was enough for making him a respondent under this rule. Thus, it was held that where the constitution of an appeal was impeached on the ground that the necessary parties had not been impleaded, the defect could be cured by their being added under this rule.[1-a] Similarly, where in a suit filed by A against B and C, a decree was passed against B but was dismissed against C, and B appealed from the decree making A alone, a respondent, and the appellate Court finds that C, and not B, is liable to A, it was held that the appellate Court could make C a respondent to the appeal under this rule and that, in allowing B's appeal, it can pass a decree against C.[2] On the other hand, it was held in another set of cases that the rule was intended to protect parties to the suit who had not been made respondents in the appeal, from being prejudiced by modifications made behind their backs in the decree under appeal, and that the party whom it was sought to bring on record must be shown to be interested in the result of the appeal before he is brought on the record. Hence, where a defendant had been exonerated in the lower Court and no appeal was filed against him, it was held that he was not interested in the result of the appeal filed against other parties and could not be added as a respondent to such an appeal under this rule unless it could be shown that the decree that might be passed in the appeal as framed might prejudice his interests in some way or other.[3] According to this group of cases, the mere fact that the presence of a party before the Court is necessary for the disposal of the appeal or cross-objections on the merits was not sufficient justification for making him a party respondent under this rule.

O.41, R.20, Note 3.

In this state of the authorities, it was held by the Privy Council in Chokalingam v. Seethai[4] that where a defendant had been exonerated in the lower Court and no appeal had been filed against him within the period of limitation, he was not interested in the result of the appeal filed by the plaintiff against other defendants, and that, in any event, it was for the plaintiff appellant who sought to make him a respondent to show what was the nature of the interest he had in the appeal. Their Lordships reached this view in spite of the fact that the presence of the proposed party respondent was necessary to enable the Court to decide on their merits certain questions that arose in the appeal. This shows that in their Lordships' view the test for the addition of a party respondent under this rule was not, whether his presence before the Court was necessary for the adequate disposal of the appeal on its merits, but whether the proposed party is one whose interests are likely to be prejudiced by the determination of the appeal as framed. So interpreted, their Lordships' judgment accords with the latter of the two views set forth above. Hence, the other view, viz., that it is enough for the application of this rule that the addition of the proposed party is necessary for the adequate disposal of the appeal on the merits should be regarded as no longer good law. It may be noted in this connection that their Lordships' judgment confirmed the judgment of the Rangoon High Court in the undermentioned case[5] and that, in this judgment, the Rangoon High Court followed the Madras decision in Subramaniya v. Veerabadra[6] which contains the clearest exposition of the second view referred to above, so that the Privy Council may be taken to have adopted this view in preference to the other view.[7] Some decisions of the High Courts[8] though pronounced subsequent to the above Privy Council case have adopted the view overruled by the Privy Council and hence must be regarded as not correct. The decisions in the undermentioned cases[9] accord with the view approved by the Privy Council and may be taken as correctly representing the law on the subject now.

But where a person can be added as a respondent under any other provision of law, his not being interested in the result of the appeal within the meaning of this rule is no objection to his being so added.[10] (See Note 8, infra.)

"Appeal" in this rule includes also cross-objections.[11]

4. "The Court may . . . direct that such person be made a respondent."—The power given to the Court under this rule is a discretionary one to be exercised in view of all the circumstances of a case.[1] Strong grounds are necessary to induce the Court to exercise its discretion in favour of an appellant who has failed to implead any party within the period of limitation.[2]

It will not be exercised in favour of an appellant where he has deliberately[3] or out of extreme negligence[4] failed to implead any party. But where he has not been guilty of any neglect the appellate Court may very well exercise its power under this rule in his favour.[5]

The power under this rule cannot be exercised so as to negative the provisions of O. 22. Hence, where a respondent has died and the appeal has abated as against him owing to his legal representatives not being brought on the record within the period of limitation, the legal representatives cannot be added under this rule[6]. Where, however, the legal representative was actually brought on the record in the suit, but was not impleaded in the appeal, he may be added under the provisions of this rule.[7] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this rule can be applied where a party who is necessary for the very constitution of the appeal is not impleaded in the appeal with the result that the period of limitation for an appeal against him has expired. According to the High Court of Patna the Court has no power, to add the non-impleaded party, as a party to the appeal.[8] The Lahore High Court has held that Court has such power.[9] The High Court of Allahabad[10] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[11] seem to be of the same view. Where, however, the only person that could be impleaded in the appeal is not impleaded, and there is consequently no valid appeal at all, this rule will not apply.[12]

The power under the rule may be exercised by the Court on its own motion or on the application of any party.[13] If the Court finds the presence of any party not already joined necessary it may direct the appellant to apply for bringing him on the record and if he fails to do so, may dismiss the appeal.[14]

take caused by a similarity of names of two persons who were parties in the lower Court, the names of those persons were left out in the appeal, it was held that the appellate Court had power to correct the mistake and have the appeal memorandum amended by inserting the proper name.[2] But the inherent powers of the Court should be invoked only in exceptional circumstances.[3]

9. Power to pass decree against party.—See R. 4, ante and R. 33, post.

10. Effect of non-joinder.—The principle of O. 1, R. 9 applies to appeals. No appeal should be made to fail merely on the ground of the non-joinder of any party[1] but the Court may deal with the matters in controversy so far as the parties actually before it are concerned. In this connection, reference may be made to the difference between proper parties and necessary parties. (Vide Notes under O. 1, R. 10). If the non-joinder is not of necessary parties the appeal may proceed with reference to the parties actually before the Court.[2] But if necessary parties have not been joined, the effect of the non-joinder on the appeal is fatal to the appeal, because in such a case there is no proper appeal before the Court at all.[3] In such cases, the Court may in its discretion add the necessary parties under this rule and then proceed with the appeal.[4] (See Note 4, ante and O. 1, R. 10.)

A person who is not joined as a party to an appeal is not bound by the decree passed in the appeal. But the assignee of a decree is, in the absence of fraud, bound by the decree of the appellate Court though he has not been made a party to the appeal against the decree.[5]

11. Limitation.—The power of the Court under this rule is not subject to the provisions of the Limitation Act and a party who is interested in the result of the appeal may be added as a respondent under this rule though the period of limitation for an appeal by or against him may have expired.[1] The Privy Council decision in Chokalingam v. Seethai[1-a]

does not affect the correctness of this proposition which is accepted as settled Law by all the High Courts. But the powers under this rule should be exercised very cautiously inasmuch as a person in whose favour the lower Court has passed a decree against which an appeal is not filed within the period of limitation has a substantive right of a valuable kind which should not be lightly treated.[2] Where a respondent is added, not under R. 20, but under O. 1, R. 10 read with S. 107, the provisions of Limitation Act will apply.[3] But where a party is added in the exercise of the Court's inherent power to preserve the ends of justice from being defeated, it seems, no limitation will apply.[4]

12. Addition of parties in second appeal.—The rule requires that the proposed party respondent must have been a party in the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred. Suppose a person was a party to the suit in the Court of first instance but was not a party in the first appellate Court, has the High Court in second appeal power to make him a respondent? On this question there is a conflict of decisions, the Allahabad High Court holding that he cannot be added as a respondent[1] and the High Courts of Calcutta,[2] Lahore,[3] Madras[4] and Patna[5] the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh[6] and the Chief Court of lower Burma holding a contrary view.[7] It is submitted the Allahabad view is not correct. (See Notes 2 and 8, supra and also Note 11 to O. 1, R. 10.)

The High Court in second appeal can remand the case to the lower Court with a direction to it to add fresh parties.[8]

11. Appeal.

1. Scope and applicability of the rule.—This rule applies also to appeals under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, X of 1859.[1] (See also Notes under O. 9, R. 13.) The appellate Court has jurisdiction under this rule to entertain an application for re-hearing by a respondent notwithstanding the fact that another respondent had preferred a second appeal to the High Court which was dismissed under O. 41, R. 11.[2]

2. "He may apply to the appellate Court".—An application for re-hearing of an appeal heard and decreed ex parte by the High Court under this rule should be made to the same Bench which heard the appeal.[1]

3. Notice.—Where a guardian ad litem has been appointed by the Court, service of notice of the appeal on such guardian is sufficient service.[1]

4. "Sufficient cause".—A respondent, against whom an appeal is heard and decided ex parte is entitled to a re-hearing of the appeal provided he proves either that he had not been duly served, or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing.[1] As to what constitutes sufficient cause, see O. 9, R. 9, Note 8, ante and the undermentioned cases.[2]

5. Inherent power to order re-hearing.—See S. 151, Note 2.

8. Rehearing pending an appeal from an ex parte decree —See O. 9, R. 13, Note 10 and S. 96, Note 12.

9. "On such terms as to costs or otherwise".—The words "or otherwise" authorise the Court to impose terms other than those relating to costs. Hence an appellate Court may require the respondent to furnish security for the due performance of the decree that may be passed on re-hearing.[1]

10. Limitation.—The period of limitation for the re-hearing of an appeal heard ex parte is that prescribed by Art. 169 of the Limitation Act, viz., 30 days from the date of the appellate decree or where notice of the appeal was not duly served, when the applicant has knowledge of the decree. See also the undermentioned cases.[1]

11. Appeal.—An appeal lies under O. 43, R. 1 (e) from an order refusing an application for re-hearing under this rule. But an application for re-hearing cross-objections decided ex parte cannot be treated as an application under this rule for the re-hearing of an appeal heard ex parte. Hence an order dismissing the application "for re-hearing the cross-objections heard ex parte" is not appealable but can be revised.[1] An appeal against an order of the lower appellate Court refusing to re-hear an appeal heard ex parte from a decree in a rent suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act valued at less than Rs. 100, is not maintainable as it is barred by S. 153 of that Act.[2]

Upon hearing respondent may object to decree as if he had preferred separate appeal.

R. 22. [S. 561.] (1) Any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree[2] on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross-objection[3] to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal,[5] provided he has filed such objection in the Appellate Court within one month from the date of service on him or his pleader of notice of the day fixed for hearing the appeal,[19] or within such further time as the Appellate Court may see fit to allow.

Form of objection and provisions applicable thereto.

(2) Such cross-objection shall be in the form of a memorandum, and the provisions of rule (1), so far as they relate to the form and contents of the memorandum of appeal, shall apply thereto.

(3) Unless the respondent files with the objection a written acknowledgment from the party who may be affected by such objection or his pleader of having received a copy thereof, the Appellate Court shall cause a copy to be served, as soon as may be after the filing of the objection, on such party or his pleader at the expense of the respondent.

(4) Where, in any case in which any respondent has under this rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit.[17]

(5) The provisions relating to pauper appeals shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to an objection under this rule.[12]

22. Adding party for purposes of cross-objection.
23. Second appeal.

1. Legislative changes.—

This rule corresponds to S. 561 of the Code of 1882. The chief changes introduced are:—

1. The words "upon the hearing" which occurred after the word "may" and before the words "not only support the decree" in sub-R. (1) have been omitted. See Note 17, infra.
2. The words "the party who may be affected by such objection" have been substituted for the words "the appellant" in sub-R. (3). See Note 13, infra.
3. Sub-R. (4) is new. See Note 17, infra.

1-a. Applicability of the rule.—The provisions of this rule apply also to appeals under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, VI of 1908 from the decisions of the Deputy Commissioner or of a Revenue Officer. As regards the applicability of sub-R. (1) to proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act, III of 1926, see List II, No. 16 of the Second Schedule of that Act.

2. Respondent may support decree without filing cross objections.—A respondent may support the decree appealed from, not only on any of the grounds decided in his favour[1] but also on grounds decided against him, and for this purpose, it is not necessary for him to file any cross-objections.[1-a]

There is a conflict of views as to whether this rule will enable a respondent to attack any portion of the decree passed against him so long as he does not ask for a variation of the decree. According to the High Courts of Calcutta,[2] Madras[3] and Lahore,[4] the respondent cannot do so. Thus the respondent cannot make out a case for a decree for the same amount by attacking the decree in respect of a right decided against him. The High Court of Patna[5] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh[6] have, on the other hand held, that the expression "support the decree" does not merely mean support the decision but permits the respondent to show by reference to a ground decided against him, that the appellant has at least secured by the decree as much as, if not more than, he is entitled to.

A point taken in the lower Court but not decided by it may be urged in support of the decree under appeal.[7] But as a general rule, a respondent cannot take a point not taken by him in the lower Court.[8] Similarly, the rule does not apply to a finding which does not affect the point at issue as the respondent cannot support the decree with reference to such a finding.[9] An appellate Court will not of itself raise a point which the respondent does not raise.[10]

3. What objections can be raised by way of cross-objections and when.—The test to determine whether any particular objection can be taken by way of cross-objections under this rule is to see whether, if the respondent had appealed against that portion of the decree which is against him, he could have raised such objection in his memorandum of appeal. If he could, then he could also raise it by way of cross-objections. An objection as to any error, defect or irregularity in any order affecting the decision of the case, which may be taken in an appeal against the decree under S. 105 of the Code can, therefore, be taken by way of cross-objections also. Thus where an ex parte decree is passed against a defendant for a portion only of the claim made by the plaintiffs and the plaintiff appeals against the portion disallowed, the defendant respondent can file cross-objections in respect of the portion decreed and may therein contend that the order placing him ex parte in the suit was wrong.[1] It was held by the Oudh Chief Court in the undermentioned case[2] that in an appeal against a decree the respondent cannot raise, by way of cross-objections, the plea that an order granting a review of the judgment originally passed was wrong. The same Court has held in another case[2-a] that a respondent cannot, by way of cross-objections, attack a non-appealable order. It is submitted that the said decisions are not correct.

Where a party could not have appealed from a decree he cannot file any cross-objections in respect of it.[2-b] Thus where a decree is wholly in favour of a party he cannot file any cross-objections against it by way of criticism of the judgment, though he can support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him.[3] But where a decree is partly in favour of, and partly against a party, he can take any cross-objections to it which he could have taken by way of appeal.[4]

The cross-objections must be directed against the particular decree under appeal,[4-a] though they need not be confined to the particular portion of the decree appealed against but may refer to any part of the decree and it need not also be confined to the subject-matter of the appeal.[5] (See also Note 7, Pt. (3), infra.)

O.41, R.22, Notes. 3—7.

Bombay Act, IV of 1898 form the award of the Collector under the Land Acquisition Act, the respondent is entitled to file cross-objections.[7] But having regard to S. 76 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1865, no memorandum of objections lies against the findings of the Court of first instance in cases under that Act.[8] The cross-objections under this rule can be filed only in a pending appeal and not after the appeal has been decided.[9]

4. Cross-objections against findings not included in decree.—See Note 3.

5. "Which could have been taken by way of appeal".—See Note 3, ante.

6. Cross-objections to order of remand.—Under S. 105, sub-S. (2) where a party who is aggrieved by an order of remand for which an appeal lies, does not appeal against it, he will be precluded from disputing its correctness, in an appeal from the decree after remand. It follows that he cannot, by way of cross-objections, attack such an order in an appeal by the other party from the decree. The decision in the case cited below[1] was under the Code of 1859 and is, in view of S. 105, sub-S. (2), no longer good law.

7. Cross-objections in second appeal.—Cross-objections may be filed in second appeals as well as in first appeals.[1] (Vide O. 42, R. 1.) But the grounds taken in cross-objections filed in second appeals must comply with the provisions of S. 100 as the respondent can only take such cross-objections as he could have taken by way of appeal.[2]

A files a suit against B. It is partly decreed in favour of A and partly dismissed. Both A and B file separate appeals. A's appeal is allowed partially and B's appeal is dismissed in toto. A, thereupon files a second appeal. B does not file any appeal, but only files cross-objections in A's second appeal. He can, by means of such cross-objections, merely attack whatever may be unfavourable to him in the decree in A's appeal to the lower appellate Court, because cross-objections must relate to the particular decree from which the appeal has been preferred. (See Note 3, above.) It is not open to B to attack the decree passed in his appeal to the lower Court by means of cross-objections in the appeal preferred against another decree of that Court.[3] Nor can he attack the decree

9. Cross-objections in Letters Patent Appeals.—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad[1] and Calcutta[2] that this rule does not apply to appeals under the Letters Patent. But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that, in view of the Privy Council decision in Sabitri v. Savi[3] this view is wrong and that this order applies also to Letters Patent Appeals.[4] It is submitted that the Madras view is correct.

10. Cross-objections in revision.—This rule does not apply to Civil revision petitions.[1] But the High Court's powers of revision may be exercised even without any application by an aggrieved party; and when a case is already before it, and the necessary parties are also before it, it has ample powers to entertain any questions that may be raised by the respondent.[2]

11. Who may file cross-objections.—As has been seen in Note 3, ante this rule provides that any respondent may take any cross-objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal. It follows that a person cannot file cross-objections unless he is a respondent to the appeal;[1] and unless he could have taken such an objection by way of an appeal.[2]

Does the mere fact that a respondent has filed an appeal against the same decree, preclude him from taking cross-objections against it in the appeal filed by the opposite party? The answer to the question depends upon the further question whether the appeal so filed by the respondent had been decided, at the time of the hearing of the cross-objections. If it had been decided, then he cannot be heard on his cross-objections under this rule.[3] He would, in fact, be barred by the principle of res judicata.[3-a] But where his appeal had not been decided on the date of the hearing of the cross-objections, he is entitled to be heard on his objections.[4] In this view, the decision of the Lahore High Court in the undermentioned case[5] where it was held broadly that a respondent who has preferred an appeal cannot file cross-objections under R. 22, seems to state the proposition too widely.

12. Cross-objections by pauper respondent.—Sub-R. (5) expressly provides for the filing of cross-objections in forma pauperis.[1] This supersedes the following decisions under the previous Codes.[2]

13. Against whom cross-objections may be filed.—The principle that no decree can be passed against a person who is not a party to the proceedings applies to cross-objections also; and hence cross-objections cannot be allowed against a person who is not a party to the appeal.[1] But in the undermentioned case[2] where it was impossible to give relief against the appellant without giving relief against the absent party also, the Bombay High Court held that the decision on the respondent's cross-objections bound the non-party also, as, otherwise, in all such cases coming under O. 41, R. 4, one of several defeated parties can appeal on behalf of all and defeat the respondent's rights under this rule. It is submitted that this decision is not correct. The appellate Court has power to add parties to the appeal under R. 20 above whenever it considers it necessary to do so and the difficulty mentioned by the Bombay High Court can thus be obviated. (See O. 41, R. 20 and the notes thereunder and also O. 1, R. 10 and S. 151.)

High Courts of Allahabad,[1] Bombay,[2] Calcutta[3] and Patna[4] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Upper Burma[5] that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellants, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross-objections as against the other respondents, the exception holding good among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents. Thus when the questions raised by the cross-objections are common both to the appellant and co-respondent the cross-objections may be entertained as against both.[6] P sues Q and R for Rs. 10,000 alleged to be his share of the profits of certain lands. A decree is passed against Q and R for Rs. 7,000. Q appeals from the decree making P and R respondents. In such a case, P may prefer cross-objections not only against Q but also against R with reference to the Rs. 3,000 in respect of which his claim was dismissed by the lower Court.[7] Similarly in suits for dissolution of partnership and for accounts, accounts are taken as between all the partners and not as between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendants on the other. Hence the appeal of one of the partners opens out the whole case and cross-objections can be urged not only against the appellant but also against co-respondents.[8] According to the High Court of Madras cross-objections may be allowed to be taken against co-respondents in all cases.[9] Opinion is divided in Lahore, Nagpur and Oudh; some cases favouring the view first mentioned above[10] and others following the Madras view.[11]

15. Omission to file cross-objections.—A party in whose favour a decree has been passed has a substantive right of a valuable kind which should not be lightly interfered with.[1] Hence, as an ordinary rule, in the absence of a cross appeal or cross-objections by a respondent, the appellate Court has no power to disturb the decree of the lower Court as far as it is in the appellant's favour[2] and cannot grant any relief to the respondent except in so far as such relief is incidental to the relief granted to the appellant.[3] This rule, however, is only a general rule and the power of the appellate Court to pass any order or decree that may be necessary in the interests of justice is now expressly saved by O. 41, R. 33[4] and was recognised by the following decisions[5] under the former Code. The general rule mentioned above applies also in cases where the decree of the lower Court is such that a remand by the appellate Court is necessary.[5-a] It follows from what has been said above that the appellate Court cannot as a general rule dispose of the appeal on a point not raised by either party.[6] (See however O. 41, R. 2). Where, however, the case is such that the respondent could not have filed an appeal or cross-objections, the appellate Court can grant him the necessary relief without any cross-objections. Thus where the suit in the first Court was for either of two reliefs in the alternative and the first Court passed a decree granting him one of the reliefs, the plaintiff having got what he asked for, can neither appeal nor file cross-objections. But if on the appeal of the opposite party, the appellate Court considers that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief granted by the decree it may, while setting aside the decree of the lower Court, pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff granting him the other relief.[7] Similarly, where the trial Court has not dealt with the respondent's claim to set off at all, the absence of cross-objections by the respondent is no bar to the entertainment of the point in appeal.[8]

16. Grounds not raised in cross-objections not to be raised at the hearing.—The respondent cannot urge at the hearing of the appeal, grounds not set forth in the memorandum of objections, except with the permission of the Court.[1] (See O. 41, R. 2.)

17. Effect of cross-objections of withdrawal of appeal or its dismissal for default.—S. 561 of the former Code provided that a respondent may, upon the hearing, take any objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal, if he had filed cross-objections. Hence, it was held that if the appeal was withdrawn before the hearing, the respondent could not prosecute his cross-objections[1] but that once the hearing had commenced the appellant could not withdraw the appeal so as to prevent the respondent from urging his cross-objections.[2] Similarly it was held that if the appeal was

(4) has been added, making it clear that the withdrawal of an appeal[4] or the dismissal of an appeal for default[5] does not affect the hearing of the respondent on his cross-objections.

Dismissal of appeal as time barred.—Under the former Code it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the entertainment of the cross-objections was contingent and dependent upon the hearing of the appeal and when the appeal was dismissed as being time-barred, the cross-objections could not be heard.[6] The same view has been held under the present Code also by the High Courts of Lahore[7] and Madras[8] notwithstanding the omission in sub-R. (1) of the word "upon the hearing" which occurred in the former section.

Dismissal of appeal for failure to pay Court-fees—Effect.—Under the former Code, where an appeal was dismissed for failure to pay Court-fees, it was held that there being no "hearing" of the appeal, the cross-objections could not be heard.[9] Even under the present Code it has been held by the Lahore[10] and Rangoon[11] High Courts and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court[12] that R. 22 (4) should be interpreted strictly and that, on the dismissal of an appeal without a hearing on account of the appellant's failure to pay the requisite Court-fees, the cross-objection cannot be heard. But it has been held by the High Court of Madras[13] that the dismissal of an appeal for failure to pay Court-fees is only a dismissal for default and does not affect the maintainability of the cross-objections.

Dismissal of appeal for failure to furnish security for costs.—It has been held by the Patna High Court that the dismissal of an appeal for failure to furnish security for costs is a dismissal for default and the respondent is entitled to have his cross-objections heard and disposed of on the merits notwithstanding such dismissal.[14] But the Oudh Court has taken a contrary view.[15]

Dismissal of appeal after hearing does not affect cross-objections.—The respondent is entitled to have his cross-objections heard and disposed of on the merits notwithstanding that the appeal is rejected on the ground that no appeal lies, because in such a case the appeal does not fail for an extraneous reason but fails after hearing.[16] Similarly where an appeal is dismissed for failure to join the necessary parties, after hearing the appeal on the question of non-joinder, the cross-objections may be heard.[17]

18. Effect, on cross-objections, of abatement of appeal.—Cross-objections cannot be heard when the appeal has abated.[1] The reason is that there is no dismissal for default or withdrawal of the appeal in such a case.

19. Limitation for cross-objections.—Cross-objections must be filed within one month from the date of the service of notice of the date fixed for hearing the appeal.[1] Otherwise they cannot be heard.[2] The appellate Court has no power to hear the appeal before the expiry of this period of one month so as to deprive the respondent of his right of filing cross-objections.[3] Where a respondent in a High Court appeal was merely served with a notice of the appeal in the usual form fixing a period of 25 days for appearance but was not served with any notice fixing the date of hearing, a memorandum of cross-objections though filed long after one month from the receipt of the former notice, is not out of time.[4] A transferee from a respondent is bound by the same period of limitation as would have applied to his transferor and cannot file any cross-objections after the expiry of that period.[5] It has been held that the notice referred to in the rule means only the notice of the original day fixed, and the fact that a subsequent notice is given of a postponed date does not give the respondent a fresh opportunity of filing a memorandum of cross-objections.[6]

When the period of one month expires on a holiday the cross-objections may be filed on the re-opening day.[7] (See S. 4 of the Limitation Act). The appellate Court may, in its discretion, extend the period within which the cross-objections are to be filed,[8] and this may be done even after the objections have been filed.[9] The extension of time may also be implied from the circumstances of the case.[10]

Sub-R. (1) of this rule prescribes the period of limitation only for filing cross-objections. Limitation for filing a cross-appeal is governed by the Limitation Act.[11]

Cross-objections in forma pauperis.—Art. 170 of the Limitation Act does not apply to cross-objections in forma pauperis and such cross-objections may be filed within the period indicated in R. 22.[12]

20. Appeal filed out of time may be treated as cross-objections.—An appeal filed beyond the period of limitation may be treated as cross-objections under this rule.[1]

21. Court-fee on cross-objections.—Under S. 16 of the Court Fees Act the Court fee payable on a memorandum of cross-objections was the difference between the fee paid on the memorandum of appeal and that payable on it if it included the subject-matter of the cross-objections.[1] A memorandum of cross-objections is now chargeable with Court-fee under Art. 1. Sch. I of the Court Fees Act.[2] That section has now been repealed and even where the appeal wherein the cross-objections are filed, falls within the scope of Sch. II, Art. 17, it is only Art. 1, Sch. I that applies to the cross-objections inasmuch as Sch. II, Art. 17 refers only to suits and memorandum of appeals. In such cases, the valuation placed by the respondent on his cross-objections must be accepted if not unreasonable.[3]

Where the decree is entirely in respondent's favour and he files objections against the findings but supporting the decree, the objections are not cross-objections and are not liable to stamp duty under Sch. I, Art. 1.[4]

Cross-objections as to costs.—In Kamal Kumare v. Rangpur Bank[5] the Calcutta High Court has held that a memorandum of cross-objections as to costs alone requires to be stamped only as a petition under Sch. 2, Art. 1 and not ad valorem under Art. 1, Sch. I, the reason given being that costs do not form the subject-matter of dispute within the meaning of Art. 1 of Sch. I. The Patna High Court has, on the other hand, held that even if the cross-objections are as to costs only an ad valorem Court-fee should be paid.[6]

Under the repealed S. 16 of the Court Fees Act, it was enough if the Court-fee on cross-objections was paid at any time before the hearing.[7] But now, S. 6 of the Court Fees Act applies to the case and the Court fees should be paid at the time of filing the cross-objections.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that S. 12 of the Court Fees Act does not apply to cross-objections.[8]

22. Adding party for purposes of cross-objection.—It has been seen in the Notes under O. 41, R. 20 that since the Privy Council decision in Chokkalingam v. Seethai, 1927 P.C. 252, the mere fact that the presence of a party before the Court is necessary for the complete disposal of the appeal or cross-objections is not enough to make him "interested" in the result of the appeal within the meaning of R. 20 unless he stands to be prejudiced by the determination of the appeal as framed, behind his back. Hence, a party cannot be added as a respondent to an appeal under R. 20 merely for the purpose of filing cross-objections against him.[1] As to the Court's power to add parties to an appeal apart from the provisions of R. 20 see Notes under R. 20. Assuming such power exists the Court will not direct the addition of a party who is an unnecessary party for the appeal merely for the purpose of enabling a respondent to file cross-objections against him.[2]

23. Second appeal.—A decree of an appellate Court disallowing the cross-objections of a respondent is a "decree passed in appeal" within the meaning of S. 100 and a second appeal lies therefrom.[1] But where the cross-objections are rejected in limine[2] as for instance, on the ground of the respondent's failure to pay the deficit Court-fees within the time ordered,[3] the order does not amount to a decree and hence is not subject to a second appeal.

Substitute the following for R. 23:—

"23. Where the Court from whose decree an appeal is preferred has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree is reversed in appeal, or where the appellate Court, in reversing or setting aside the decree under appeal considers it necessary in the interests of justice to remand the case, the appellate Court may by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case so remanded and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suit; and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions, be evidence during the trial after remand.

1. Legislative changes.—

The words "and the evidence . . . . . remand" at the end of the rule are new.

Before S. 562 was amended by Act VII of 1888, the section only applied where the lower Court had disposed of the suit on a preliminary point "so as to exclude any evidence of fact which appears to the appellate Court essential to the determination of the rights of the parties". The words were omitted by Act VII of 1888, which also substituted the words "to determine the suit on the merits" for the words "investigate the suit on the merits" which occurred originally.

2. Distinction between Rr. 23 and 25.—This rule empowers the appellate Court to remand the case only when the lower Court has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point. If the trial Court decides the suit on the merits, it is not open to the appellate Court to order a remand under this rule. It may, however, act under Rr. 24 or 25, infra.[1]

The following are the points of distinction between Rr. 23 and 25, infra.

(1) Where an order of remand is made under this rule, the whole case goes back for decision to the lower Court (except on the point on which the appellate Court has reversed the finding of the lower Court). Whereas in the case of an order under R. 25, the case is retained on the file of the appellate Court and only issues are remitted to the lower Court for findings.[1-a]

(2) An order of remand under this rule is appealable but not an order under R. 25.

(3) An order of remand under this rule is a final order which cannot be reconsidered by the Court which passed it except on review: whereas an order under R. 25 is an interlocutory order which, it is open to the Court, to reconsider.[2]

3. "Preliminary point," meaning of.—A point can be said to be a preliminary point within the meaning of this rule, only where it is such that the decision thereon in a particular way is sufficient to dispose of the whole suit, without the necessity for a decision on the other points in the case.[1] The point may be one of fact or of law. Thus a suit will be held to be disposed of on a preliminary point if it is disposed of on any of the following grounds:—

(1) that the suit is barred by res judicata.[2]

(2) that the suit is barred by limitation[3] or by any other rule of law.[4]

(3) that the document on which the suit is based is inadmissible in evidence,[5]

(4) that the plaintiff is estopped from proving his case,[6]

(5) that the plaintiff has no cause of action,[7]

(6) that the suit is bad for a defect in the description of the defendant,[8]

(7) that the matter is concluded by a valid award,[9]

(8) that the case raised at the hearing is different from that raised in the plaint,[10]

(9) that the suit has abated.[11]

There is a conflict of opinion, however, as to whether the point should be one not relating to the merits of the case. It has been held in one class of cases that a point is not a preliminary point where it relates to the merits of the case, although its decision may dispense with the necessity for a decision on the other points in the case.[12] Thus according to this view a suit cannot be said to have been disposed of on a preliminary point in the following cases:—

(1) Where, in a suit for ejectment and damages, the Court finds that the plaintiff has failed to establish the title alleged by him and dismisses the suit.[13]

(2) Where, in a suit for mesne profits, the Court finds that the defendant was not in possession during the period in question and dismisses the suit.[14]

(3) See also the undermentioned cases.[15]

According to another class of cases a point may be a preliminary point although it relates to the merits of the case. Thus, according to these decisions a preliminary point means some point either collateral to the merits which precluded their determination altogether, or some particular question which, though relating to the merits, precluded their general determination.[16] Thus, according to this view, in a suit for damages for breach of contract, the question as to the factum of contract is a preliminary point although it relates to the merit of the case.[17] Similarly, in a suit based on an award, the question of the validity of the award has been held to be a preliminary point.[18] So also the question of the validity of the contract on which the suit is based.[19] See also the following cases for other instances.[20]

The question whether a point is a preliminary one does not depend upon the degree of importance which it may assume during the hearing of the case.[21] Nor is it necessary that the suit should have been dismissed as a result of the finding on the preliminary point. A suit may also be decreed on a preliminary point. Thus where a decree is passed, not after trial on all the issues but on the basis of an award[22] or on the consent of the parties[23] or on the basis of a commissioner's report,[24] the suit may be said to be disposed of on a preliminary point. See also the undermentioned cases.[25]

Where the points left undecided in a suit are such that they would have arisen only after the suit is disposed of, it cannot be said to have been decided on a preliminary point.[26] Thus in a suit for possession and mesne profits in which a question of mesne profits would arise after the decree for possession if the suit had been differently framed or if an amendment of the plaint had been allowed, have not been decided.[4] Hence, where the appellate Court allows an amendment of the plaint[5] or directs the addition of certain parties[6] and remands the suit, the remand is not under this rule.

But the mere fact that the Court has recorded evidence on all the issues does not make its decision other than a disposal on a preliminary point if it has, in fact, decided the suit with reference to its finding on a preliminary issue without deciding the other issues in the case.[7]

5. Entire suit must have been disposed of on a preliminary point.—In order to attract the application of this rule the entire suit must have been disposed of on a preliminary point and not only a portion of it.[1] A sues B for an injunction restraining B from interfering with A's enjoyment of his lands and for a declaration of his right of easement over B's land. The Court decrees the claim for injunction but dismisses the suit so far as the claim for easement is concerned on the ground that, on the face of the plaint, the statement of the easement claimed is so inadequate and unsatisfactory that it is impossible to enter into the question thereby raised. In such a case, only a portion of the suit having been disposed of on a preliminary point, this rule does not apply.[2] Similarly where several questions have been raised and decided, the suit cannot be said to be disposed of on a preliminary point merely because one or more of the issues have not been decided on the merits but have been disposed of on a preliminary point.[3] Thus in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent and for ejectment from certain plots of land, one of the questions was as to the amount payable by the plaintiff as the value of improvements effected by the defendant on the plaintiff's land. The trial Court held that the plaintiff should pay Rs. 10,000 as decided in a prior litigation between the parties. On appeal the appellate Court held that the prior decision was not res judicata and remanded the case to assess the then value of the improvements. Held that this rule did not apply to the case as the decision of only one of the issues in the case and not of the whole suit was based on a preliminary point.[4] In this view the undermentioned decision[5] of the Patna High Court, seems to be open ground that it was submitted too late and had thereafter disposed of the suit on the merits. The appellate Court remanded the case under this rule on the ground that the suit had been disposed of on a preliminary point, though as a matter of fact only the question as to the award was disposed of on a preliminary point.

Where a suit has not been disposed of on a preliminary point in the sense described above, no remand can be made under this rule.[6] Thus no remand can be made under this rule merely because:—

(1) The lower Court has omitted to decide one or more issues or the appellate Court requires certain additional issues to be tried.[7]

(2) The lower Court has wrongly rejected certain evidence[8] or the taking of additional evidence is found to be necessary.[9]

(3) The lower Court has not recorded the evidence properly.[10]

(4) The lower Court admitted inadmissible evidence.[11]

(5) The appellate Court is dissatisfied with the decision of the lower Court[12] or

(6) The suit was not properly tried.[13]

As to the inherent power of the Court to remand in such cases, see Note 10, infra.

6. Order returning or rejecting plaint whether disposal on preliminary point.—It has been held in some cases that an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court under O. 7, R. 10 is not a disposal of the suit on a preliminary point within the meaning of O. 41, R. 23.[1] Similarly it has been held in some cases that the rejection of a plaint under O. 7, R. 11 does not amount to a disposal of the suit on a preliminary point.[2] The rationale of these cases would seem to be that a suit cannot be said to be disposed of when the decision, in no way affects the rights of the parties.[3]

If it had been rejected on presentation without being admitted, there might be some force in the argument that the order of remand of the appellate Court was only order admitting plaint and hence not appealable].

(See S. 2 (2), Notes 6 and 13.) But in the cases cited below[4] it has been held that even when a plaint is rejected the suit can be said to be disposed of on a preliminary point. These cases proceed on the ground that as the rejection of the plaint precludes the Court from deciding the points arising in the case, the suit may be regarded as disposed of on a preliminary point.

7. Decision of lower Court must be reversed.—No remand can be ordered under this rule unless the decision of the lower Court on the preliminary point is reversed in appeal.[1] The decision of the lower Court must be definitely reversed. Where such is not the case, it is not a good ground for ordering a remand under this rule, that the lower Court has decided the issue on a wrong view as to the burden of proof,[2] or that the appellate Court is not able, on the materials before it, to agree with the findings of the lower Court[3] or that the appellate Court considers that the lower Court's finding is not supportable on the ground given by that Court but might be supported on another ground which requires investigation.[4] But where the finding of the lower Court on the preliminary point is definitely reversed by the appellate Court, the suit may be remanded under this rule notwithstanding that the decision of the appellate Court is made subject to a finding of fact which is left to be determined by the lower Court.[5] Where the intention to reverse the decree is clear, the remand is not vitiated by the mere absence of a formal order setting aside the decree.[6] Where the lower Court has decided the suit on several preliminary points, the appellate Court should reverse the decision on all of them before remanding under this rule.[7]

Under this rule, it is not competent to the appellate Court to affirm the decision of the lower Court regarding one part of the suit and remand the suit regarding the other part, because, otherwise there would be two final judgments in the same case—a thing opposed to the provisions of the Code and because there is only a partial reversal of the lower Court's decree.[8] The rule contemplates that the whole case, except as to the preliminary point, is remanded to the lower Court. Hence where the appellate Court not only reverses the decision of the lower Court on the preliminary point but also gives its findings on other issues in the case excepting one, it should not remand the case under this rule for the decision of that single issue but may remit it to the lower Court for a finding under R. 25.[9]

8. "The appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case".—These words show that the appellate Court is not bound to remand a suit under R. 23 merely because the circumstances of a case fall within the provisions of the rule: it may either do so or proceed under R. 24 or R. 25.[1] The question is one of discretion.[2]

9. "And may direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case".—This rule does not enable the appellate Court, while remanding the suit for trial de novo to direct that one of the essential issues in the case should be omitted[1]: for the rule contemplates that the whole suit except with reference to the preliminary point should be remanded to the lower Court. But if any limits are imposed by the appellate Court in remanding a case, the lower Court has no power to travel beyond those limits. (See Note 30, Point 4.) In an old case decided under the Code of 1859 it was held that an appellate Court cannot remand a case for re-trial with instructions to frame new issues.[2] See also Note 27.

10. Inherent power of remand.—It is now settled law in all the High Courts except the Allahabad High Court that in cases not falling within the scope of O. 41, R. 23 an appellate Court has an inherent power ex debito justitiae to remand a case for re-trial.[1] In the Allahabad High Court, the point is unsettled.[2] Under the previous Code there was a section, viz., S. 564 which prohibited the appellate Court from making a remand except as provided by S. 562 (O. 41, R. 23).[3] This section was found to be extremely embarrassing in practice as for instance, when the appellate Court felt a remand to be urgently needed in view of the amendment of the plaint or the addition of new parties. The repeal of this section in the present Code leaves the way open for remand in such cases,[4] although the Legislature has thought it safer not to formally enact that the appellate Court has power, in cases not covered by R. 23 to remand.[5]

But the inherent power of remand should not be exercised except when it is clearly necessary for the ends of justice to do so.[6] When there is any specific provision of the Code which would meet the necessities of the case[7] or when the circumstances are such that the appellate Court can itself dispose of the case[8] (see O. 41, Rr. 24 to 29) no remand should be ordered. A remand should not generally speaking be ordered when the defect in the proceedings has been due to the negligence or default of the party who asks for remand.[9]

See the amendment of this rule by the Madras High Court.

11. Grounds of remand.—Subject to the general principles stated in Note 10 supra Courts have an inherent power of remand in the following, among other cases:—

(1) When the appellate Court directs an amendment of the plaint,[1] or the addition of fresh parties.[2]

On appeal to Privy Council, their Lordships refused to remand the case, as substantial justice was done to the parties though somewhat in a rough way]. See Narottam Rajaram v. Mohanlal Kahandas, (1912) 17 Ind Cas 891 (892): 14 Bom L R 1154: 37 Bom 289.

O. 41, R. 23, Notes 12—14.

12. Wrong onus of proof.—Where the trial Court has thrown the burden of proof on the wrong party, the appellate Court may if necessary, remand the case for re-trial.[1] But where the error in casting the burden of proof has not affected the evidence produced on either side and both parties have given all the evidence that they had, the question of burden of proof becomes immaterial and no remand can be ordered merely because the lower Court has wrongly cast the onus of proof.[2]

13. Exclusion of evidence.—An erroneous exclusion of evidence by the lower Court may be a good ground for remand under the inherent power of the Court.[1] Similarly the failure to give a party an opportunity to produce evidence will be a good ground for remand.[2] So also, where the appellate Court is unable, on the materials before it, to decide the case, it may remand the case for retrial after taking fresh evidence.[3]

14. Basing decision on inadmissible evidence.—Where the lower Court's judgment is vitiated by the admission of inadmissible evidence, the case may be remanded for re-trial under the inherent power of the Court.[1] But a remand is not necessary if the finding of the lower Court is amply supported by the other evidence in the case.[2]

15. New plea is not a ground of remand.—As a general rule, a remand cannot be ordered to enable a new plea raised for the first time in appeal, to be tried.[1] (See Notes under O. 41, Rr. 1 and 12). But this may be done in exceptional cases.[2]

The appellate Court in an appeal from an order rejecting an application for setting aside an ex parte order can treat the appeal as one from the ex parte decree itself and decide the whole case finally.[3]

19. Remand by consent.—A case may be remanded with the consent of parties though a remand may not be permissible otherwise.[1] Thus a case may be remanded on the agreement of parties for trial on issues not raised in the memorandum of appeal.[2]

20. Remand in second appeal.—O. 41, R. 23 applies also to second appeals. (See S. 108 and O. 42, R. 1.) Hence, where a first appeal has been disposed of on a preliminary point the High Court may, in second appeal, remand the case if it reverses the decision on the preliminary point[1] or it may itself dispose of the appeal.[2] But even if a case has not been disposed of on a preliminary point, the High Court in second appeal may remand the case in the exercise of its inherent power to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated.[3] (See Note 10, supra). remanded for re-hearing on an issue raised for the first time in second appeal.[4] Further, unless it is absolutely necessary in the interests of justice, to remand a case, a remand will not be ordered under the inherent power of the Court.[5] (See Note 10, supra.)

Moreover, the powers of the High Court in second appeal are circumscribed by the provisions of S. 100, and hence the High Court cannot in second appeal reverse a finding of fact of the lower appellate Court, however erroneous it may be, and cannot remand a case on the basis of such reversal, unless the finding is vitiated by any such illegality or defect as is mentioned in S. 100.[6] It should also be noted that the power of the High Court to decide questions of fact from the materials on record have been considerably extended by S. 103 and the amendments to that section made by Act VI of 1926, and the High Court may itself decide such questions where it is in a position to do so satisfactorily from the materials on the record. For further information see S. 103 and the notes thereto and also the following cases.[7]

21. Appeal against an order of remand under this rule.—O. 43, R. 1 (u) gives a right of appeal against an order of remand under this rule if an appeal would lie from the decree of the appellate Court.[1] An appeal will, therefore, lie from an order of remand only in those cases in which an appeal would lie against the decree, if the appellate Court, instead of making an order of remand, passed a decree on the strength of the adjudication on which the order of remand was based. The test is whether, in the circumstances, an appeal would lie if the order of remand were itself treated as a decree and not a mere order.[2] Thus no appeal lies against an order of remand in a suit of a small cause nature whose value does not exceed Rs. 500,[3] as a second appeal would be barred by S. 102 if the order of remand were treated as a decree. Similarly, an appeal against an order of remand is only maintainable on a question of law.[4]

Section 589, Cl. (28) (correspondent to O. 43, R 1) of the former Code did not contain the condition as to an appeal being open from the decree. Hence it was held in the following cases that S 536 (now S 102) was no bar to an appeal from an order of remand though it would have barred an appeal from the decree—These cases are no longer good law:—The Collector of Bijnor v. Jafar Ali Khan, (1881) 3 All 18 (20); Gulam Husen v. Musa Miya, (1884) 8 Bom 260 (261); Mahadev Narsingh v. Ragho Keshav, (1883) 7 Bom 292 (293); Kirte Mohalder v. Ramjan Mohaldar, (1884) 10 Cal 528 (524): 5 Shome L R 159; Bhai Wazira v. Chuhar Mal, 1895 Pun Re No 85 F B; Chinnatambi Goundan v. Chinnanna Goundan, (1896) 19 Mad 391 (394); Agandh v. Khaja, (1907) 11 Cal W N 862 (865); Qadir Bakhsh v. Shamas Din, 1923 Lah 206 (207): 73 Ind Cas 756.

Even under the former Code S 588, Cl. (28) of which (now O. 43, R. 1 (u) did not contain the condition as to an appeal being competent from the decree of the appellate

O.41, R.23, Note 21.

S. 104, sub-S. (2) bars a second appeal from an order passed in an appeal from an order under S. 104 or O. 43, R. 1. Hence, where an order of remand is made in an appeal against an order under O. 43, R. 1 no further appeal is competent.[5]

Can an order of remand be appealed from after it has been carried out and the lower Court has decided the suit on the merits in accordance with the order of remand? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. The High Court of Allahabad[6] the Chief Court of Punjab[7] and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Nagpur[8] and Oudh[9] have held that an appeal is not barred under such circumstances and that if the order of remand is set aside in appeal the proceedings based on the order of remand fall to the ground. This view proceeds on the ground that there is nothing in the Code to limit the right of appeal against an order of remand under such circumstances. On the other hand, the Calcutta High Court has held that an appeal against an order of remand must be filed before the lower Court has decided the suit on the merits in accordance with the order of remand.[10] The reason given is that an appeal against an interlocutory order cannot be filed after the decree in the case has been passed.

Court, it was held in the following cases that questions of fact could not be re-opened in an appeal from an order of remand, the reason given being that such an appeal was a second appeal:—Tika Ram v. Shama Charn, (1898) 20 All 42 (45): 1897 All W N 195; Gouri Shankar v. Karima Bibi, (1893) 15 All 413 (414): 1893 All W N 178; Naimallah Pramanick v. Girish Narain, (1882) 8 Cal 674 (675); Venganayyan v. Ramasami, (1896) 19 Mad 422 (424): 4 Mad L Jour 263.

An appeal lies as to an order regarding costs in an order of remand.[11] (See also the undermentioned case.[12])

22. Appeal from order of remand under inherent power.—O. 43, R. 1 (u) gives a right of appeal only against an order of remand under O. 41, R. 23. Hence, there is no right of appeal against an order of remand under the inherent power of the Court.[1] But the right of appeal under O. 43, R. 1 (u) is not confined to cases which properly come within the scope of O. 41, R. 23 but extends also to cases in which the order of remand purports to be under R. 23 although in reality the circumstances under which the order is passed may not fall within the purview of that rule.[2] This view proceeds on the reasoning that the right of appeal depends on what the Court purports to have done and not on what it ought to have done.[2-a] It has been held in the undermentioned cases[3] that where the order appealed from is silent as to whether it was passed under S. 151 or under this rule, it should be held to have been passed under this rule and not under S. 151 even though the circumstances of the case do not bring it within the scope of this rule. The reasoning on which these cases proceed is this. An order of remand can be passed under the Court's inherent power only in exceptional cases. Therefore where the Court intends to remand a case under its inherent power it may be expected to show in its order that it considers the case to be of an exceptional nature and that it therefore applies the provisions of S. 151. Where this is not done the order may be presumed to have been passed as under O. 41, R. 23 and not under S. 151. If such a presumption is not to be made, many an illegal order of remand would be incapable of being appealed against. It is submitted that this reasoning is not correct. It involves a presumption that the appellate Court illegally applied the provisions of R. 23 to a case to which it does not apply when it was legally open to it to achieve its object by applying S. 151. The Madras High Court has

But according to some decisions the question of appeal must depend on whether the conditions laid down in O 41, R 23 have been complied with and not on, whether the appellate Court purported to act or did not purport to act under R 23—See the following cases:— Banka Behari Deb v. Birendra Nath Dutta, 1927 Cal 850 (852, 853): 103 Ind Cas 864: 55 Cal 219: 47 Cal L Jour 69 [Remarks were obiter in this case]. See also observations in Jagathari v. Medini Mohan, 1927 Cal 642 (643, 644): 31 Cal W N 878: 104 Ind Cas 422; Sundararama v. Sathianatha, 1927 Mad 1190 (1190): 1927 Mad W N 286: 102 Ind Cas 28 [Remand is not under R 23 though the appellate Court refers to the rule in the judgment, if R 23 does not really apply to the case]. itself.[1-a] Similarly, in an appeal from an order of remand purporting to be under R. 23 (though that rule did not apply to the case), the High Court may enter into the merits of the lower Court's decision in respect of which the order of remand was made[2] and may either dispose of the case itself or remand it to the lower appellate Court according to the necessities of the case.[3] But the High Court has no power in an appeal from an order of remand, to go into any questions unconnected with the correctness of the order of remand.[4]

26. To what Court remand could be made.—Ordinarily the case should be remanded to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred and to no other Court.[1] But if the appellate Court has power to transfer a case from one Court to another there is nothing illegal in remanding the case to a Court to which the case could have been transferred.[2] (See also Note 30, infra and S. 24, ante.)

27. Effect of order of remand.—An order of remand implies a reversal of the decision of the lower Court[1] and re-opens the whole case for re-trial by the lower Court except in regard to matters decided by the order of remand.[2] There is a difference of opinion as to whether where a suit is remanded the lower Court can raise another preliminary point which was not the subject-matter of the appeal, and decide the case thereon. the High Courts of Allahabad[3] and Bombay[4] it cannot. According to these decisions such points might and ought to have been raised before the remand. The High Court of Madras has held that it can.[5] The High Court of Calcutta has expressed conflicting views.[6]

After a suit has been remanded the appellate Court is not competent to pass any order in it unless and until the case comes before it again in appeal.[7] (See also Notes 2 and 30.)

28. Effect of improper order of remand.—Where an order of remand is passed in circumstances which do not warrant it, the defect involved in the order is one of procedure and not of substantive law and comes within the purview of S. 99 of the Code. But the question arises whether such an order is one affecting the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of S. 99. On this question there is a conflict of opinion. According to the High Courts of Bombay[1] and Calcutta[2] such an order is not one passed without jurisdiction and hence, does not, in itself, affect the jurisdiction of the Court and neither the order of remand nor the subsequent proceedings based thereon can be interfered with unless the decision of the case on the merits or the jurisdiction of the Court in any other respect has been affected. But according to the High Courts of Allahabad,[3] Madras[4] and Patna[4-a] such an order of remand is one made without jurisdiction, the term "jurisdiction" being understood not in the sense of the power to deal with a certain matter but in the sense of the power to pass a given kind of order in such matter, and therefore the order of remand and the subsequent proceedings based thereon may be set aside although the decision of the case on the merits or the jurisdiction of the Court in any other respect has not been affected.

As to the effect of setting aside an order of remand, see the following cases.[6]

29. Matters decided by order of remand, finality of.—S. 105, sub-S. (2) of the present Code provides that if the party aggrieved by an order of remand from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he cannot subsequently question the correctness of the order of remand. (See S. 105, Note 8 and the following cases.[1]) But even apart from the said provisions an order of remand under this rule as contrasted with an order remitting issues for findings under R. 25, is, as regards the Court passing the order, conclusive on all points decided thereby and they cannot be re-opened in that Court before the same Judge or his successor, in appeal from the decision of the lower Court on remand.[2] Nor can the Court to which the case is remanded go behind the order of remand.[3]

The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held in the undermentioned case[3-a] that notwithstanding the fact that an order of remand is not appealed against the Court is bound to take notice of a subsequent event which renders the order of remand nugatory. Thus, where a Revenue Court dismisses the suit on the ground that the plaintiff has no title to the property and the District Judge remands the suit in appeal under this rule, and the trial Court, after remand, decrees the suit, but before the hearing of the appeal after remand, the defendant obtains a declaration from the Civil Court that he was the owner, it has been held, that the Court is bound to take notice of the Civil Court's decree and act accordingly.

But an order of remand does not preclude the determination of points not conclusively decided by it.[4]

30. Jurisdiction after remand depends upon the order of remand.—Where a case is remanded to a particular Court, it is only that Court and no other Court that can try it.[1] But if a case is remanded to a District Court, that Court can, under S. 24 of the Code, transfer the case to any other Court subordinate to it which is competent to try it.[2] An order of remand cannot confer on the lower Court to which the case is remanded jurisdiction which it would not have possessed but for the order of remand.[3] Where the order of remand lays down any limits for the enquiry to be made by the lower Court, that Court has no jurisdiction to enter into questions which fall outside those limits.[4]

31. Right of parties after remand.—See Notes 27, 29 and 32.

32. Procedure after remand.—When a case is remanded for retrial, the whole case is re-opened and the Court is to proceed de novo and is entitled to take evidence again even of those witnesses who had already been examined.[1] But if the remand is only to enable the Judge in the lower Court to record his reasons, for his judgment a trial de novo is ultra vires.[2] When the lower Court has not properly carried out the order of remand, the case may be again remanded to it.[3]

Where a case is remanded to the lower Court for re-trial the parties are, according to the practice of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court, not entitled as of right to notice of the date fixed for re-hearing.[4] Nor are they entitled to notice of the receipt of records by the lower Court.[4-a] They are, however entitled to have a reasonable date fixed for further hearing.[4-b] No fresh vakalatnama is necessary in a remanded case.[5] When a case is remanded in second appeal to the first appellate Court, the latter may ask the trial Court to take additional evidence.[6]

33. Refund of Court-fee on remand.—Where a remand is made under this rule the appellate Court is bound under S. 13 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870 to order a refund of the Court-fee.[1]

O.41, R.23, Notes 33—35.

There is a difference of opinion, however, as to whether a refund can be ordered in cases in which a remand has been made, not under this rule but under the Court's inherent powers. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur has held that a refund cannot be ordered in such cases.[2] According to the High Court of Patna also S. 13 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870 applies only to cases of remand under this rule.[3] The High Court of Lahore has, on the other hand, held that a refund could be ordered in such cases[4] but that the power is a discretionary one.[5]

When an appeal is remanded as to a part, the appellant is entitled to a refund of a proportionate part of the Court-fee.[6]

34. Costs.—See the undermentioned cases.[1]

35. Revision.—Remand under O. 41, R. 23.—No revision lies against an order of remand under this rule because such an order is appealable.[1] Even if the order of remand is not justified under the terms of this rule it is not a case of want of jurisdiction within the meaning of S. 115, as the Court has inherent jurisdiction to remand.[2]

Remand under inherent power.—An order of remand under the inherent power of the Court is not appealable. Hence the question arises whether such an order is revisable under S. 115. On this question there is a conflict of opinion. According to some decisions a revision does not lie in such a case.[3] But according to other decisions a revision is maintainable.[4] ground entirely different from that on which the lower Court proceeded. Prior to Act, VII of 1888 the word "shall" occurred after the words "the appellate Court" and so it was held that the appellate Court was bound to decide the case itself in the circumstances mentioned in the rule.[2] The word "shall" has now been replaced by the word "may" and the appellate Court may now, if necessary, remand a case under the present Code notwithstanding that the decision of the lower Court has not resulted in the exclusion of any material evidence.

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether an appellate Court can, under this rule, decide a case without a remand on an issue not raised in the Court below. According to the High Court of Calcutta, the framing of a new issue is not a "resettling" of the issues, and the appellate Court cannot, under this rule frame such issue and decide it.[3] The High Court of Bombay, has on the other hand, held that though the point was raised for the first time in appeal, a remand was not necessary where it could be decided on the evidence on the record.[4] It is submitted that the latter view is correct. There is no reason why the framing of a new issue should be regarded as necessarily different from "resettling" issues within the meaning of this rule. The true view appears to be that when a new case is pleaded in the appellate Court it will not act under this rule unless the case arises on the facts stated in the pleadings and the opposite party is not taken by surprise.[5]

In an appeal against an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court, the appellate Court, cannot decide the suit on the merits under this rule: the reason is that such a decision would be outside the scope of the appeal the same not being against the decree in the suit.[6] on a preliminary point within the meaning of R. 23 but at the same time has omitted to try any material issues or to determine any material questions of fact, it is not competent to the appellate Court to remand the whole case under R. 23, but it may, if necessary, remit issues for findings under this rule keeping the case on its own file.[2] The appellate Court is not precluded from passing an order of remand under the present rule merely because it would have been competent to the Court under the circumstances to remand the case under R. 23.[3]

In an appeal from an order under O. 7, R. 10 returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court, the appellate Court has no power to remand issues which would have arisen if the lower Court had entertained the suit.[4] to have been given in the lower Court.[2] It has, however, been held that a remand can be made under this rule where the lower Court has not arrived at its findings after a full and proper trial, inasmuch as, in such a case, the issue cannot be regarded as having been tried by the lower Court.[3]

The omission by a plaintiff to press a certain point is, generally speaking, no ground for refusing to remit an issue on the point, if the lower Court has omitted to frame or try the same.[4]

5. "May, if necessary, frame issues".—The appellate Court is not bound to remand issues under this rule in every case in which the lower Court has failed to frame or decide any issue.[1] The question is one for the exercise of the discretion of the Court in each case.[2] Thus, where, in spite of there being no formal issue on a point, it has been tried by the lower Court after giving the parties full opportunity to produce their evidence and present their case on it, a remand under this rule is not necessary,[3] especially where the parties have led evidence fully on the point.[4] But where a point is newly raised in the appellate Court, it should not be decided without giving the opposite party an opportunity to meet the new case.[5] A remand will not, however, be ordered if the circumstances are such that even if the remand is granted it is unlikely that the party asking for the remand, would be able to establish the case he wants to make out.[5-a] In ordering a remand under this rule, the appellate Court should specify the issues to be tried by the lower Court.[6]

6. "Shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required".—These words "additional evidence required" leave a discretion to the appellate Court not to direct the lower Court to take further evidence when it remands a case for a finding on a specific issue on a consideration of the evidence in the case.[1] Where the appellate Court has not directed the lower Court to take further evidence the lower Court may,[2] but is not bound to do so.[3]

7. What Court may try the issues remitted.—Where issues are referred to the Court from which the appeal was preferred, no other Court has power to try them.[1] It has been held by the Punjab Chief Court that an order remitting issues to a Court other than that from which the appeal has been preferred, is not one without jurisdiction but is only an error of procedure.[2] Where during the pendency of an appeal to the High Court, the lower Court had lost jurisdiction over the suit area owing to a re-distribution of areas, but the High Court directed the lower Court to submit findings on certain issues, Held, that the lower Court should be considered to have retained the jurisdiction as regards pending suits, and that even assuming that the lower Court had lost its jurisdiction to try the suit, the direction of the High Court should be considered as a transfer of the case to that Court.[3]

In the undermentioned case[4] the Court of first instance omitted to try
